The George Farragut line for Wallace Farragut seems to go like this...

A. GEORGE ANTHONY MARIN FARRAGUT

Subject: Wallace Farragut, father of Mina & Virginia..PEDIGREE?

Dear Else Martin,

My second email to you today is my question of how Wallace Farragut is related to Admiral David Glasgow Farragut?

Here is the only Census information I have of Wallace Farragut: Census Reports of Wallace Farragut

1920 Fed Census of Mowry Precinct No. 16, Santa Cruz County, Arizona:

Wallace FARRAGUT	Head	48 (b. 1872)	LA-LA-
Anna R.		Wife 27 (b. 1893)	SD-SD-
Virginia	daug.	6 (b. 1914)	Illinois-SD-
Wilma	daug.	3 (b. 1917)	MS-LA-

1880 Fed Census of Louisiana

William FARRAGUT family -- but Wallace not present.

1870 Fed Census of 7th Ward New Orleans, Orleans County, Louisiana: p 550

Wm. J. FARRAGUT	30	clerk in store	-/300 Louisiana
Mary	29	keeping house
Wallace		9 (COMMENT: b. 1861)
Virginia	7
George		4
Alfred		2

next door resides:
?Hafcow FARRAGUT	33	inspector customs	-300 Mississippi
Delphine	29	keeping house	Louisiana

Now, despite the 11 year loss in years between Wallace's age in 1870 vs. that in the Census of 1920 I suppose he is the same Wallace. Perhaps Wallace had done a "little white lie" when he proposed marriage to the youthful Anna Rose?

I have not found Wallace Farragut in Census of 1900 SD, or 1900 and 1910 Illinois.

My question now is a simple one: what is Wallace's pedigree? How does he relate to Admiral Farragut? How does he relate to the various sons of the Admiral's father, Jorge Farragut?

We can see why Wallace's first born daughter was named Virginia (his sister's name) but is Mina/Wilma a Farragut or an Anna Rose family name?

Sincerely, Bob Swenson

Louisiana Deaths

Captain William A. C. Farragut was a Union naval captain who fought in the War of 1812 and lived in the Moss Point area about 1840. He was the son of George Farragut, who fought in the American Revolution. Captain William Farragut was given credit for getting rid of the pirates that operated at the mouth of the Mississippi River. His uncle was Admiral David Glasgow Farragut who is famous for saying “Damn the torpedoes – full speed ahead” during the Battle of Mobile Bay. Some of the descendants of this Farragut family still live in Jackson County today.

The following from the Mobile Register shows how families were divided during the civil war: W. J.
Farragut is now mayor of the village of East Side, and is the son of Admiral Farragut's brother. He was in New Orleans when it fell into the hands of the Union soldiers. Admiral Farragut sent for Mr. W. J. Farragut and his brother, Glasco, and offered them aid, which they courteously declined and both asked for passes to leave New Orleans with the first schooner load of refugees that came to Pascagoula.
Both joined the Mobile Dragoons, commanded by Captain John H. Marshall of Mobile and shared in the misfortunes of the Confederacy instead of accepting advancements of their own interests from their illustrious relative in the enemy's ranks.

It Is Dangerous to Neglect a Cold.
How often do we hear it remarked:
"It's only a cold," and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency of a cold to result in pneumonia, and has gained its great popularity and extensive sale
by its prompt cures of this most common ailment. It always cures and is pleasant to take. For sale by McVea
Young, Scranton.

The Louisiana editors have adopted a resolution to do all in their power to urge the Legislature of that State to make an appropriation of $100,000 for a Louisiana monument in the Vicksburg National Military Park.

WILLIAM A. C. FARRAGUT SERVED
AS MIDSHIPMAN WITH LIEUT. T.
AP CATESBY JONES IN FIGHT WITH
BRITISH

December 14, 1814

. . . (William A. C. Farragut, Midshipman U. S. Navy, and brother of David Glasgow Farragut) participated in the gallant resistance of the gunboats under Commodore T. Ap Catesby Jones, on Lake Borgne, in December, 1814.

The exposure on this occasion, and in the operations of Commodore Patterson against Lafitte's Baratarians brought on a severe attack of rheumatism, which disabled him for active service ever afterward. Bent nearly double and crippled by his malady, he lived for many years with his family on Rampart Street (New Orleans, La.), retaining the commission of Lieutenant in the Navy, but rarely able to perform any duty.

During the Mexican War his name was dropped from the Naval list, under erroneous representations, but through the active efforts in his behalf of the Hon. Emile LaSere, then Member of Congress from Louisiana, he was restored and died a few years after in the service. . . .

Death of Aged Citizen

fare Chron. 3-12-1920 1 mark, age 87

Mr. W.J. Farragut, one of the oldest citizens of this community, died at the home of his son, L. J. Farragut, in East Side, after an illness of some months due to the infirmities of age. Mr. Farragut was born in New Orleans in 1833, and was therefore 87 years of age at the time of his death. (He was age , born in Mississippi in the 1880 Jackson Co Miss Census.) He had been in failing health for some months, but until recently, despite his advanced age, was able to go about and was frequently seen on our streets in company with his son, Mr. A. Farragut of this city.

Although born in New Orleans, Mr. Farragut moved to this city in his early youth and had spent almost his entire life here, living part of the time in the city, and part of the time in East Side and also Orange Grove. He was a nephew of the great Admiral Farragut, of civil war fame. Mr. Farragut had been twice married, his second wife having been dead a number of years, since which time he has made his home with his sons in this city and East Side.

MAJOR GEORGE FARRAGUT

Major George Farragut is often relegated to a secondary place in favor of his noted son, Admiral David Glasgow Farragut, not too well beloved by Mississippians. George Farragut, b. on Island of Minorca of Spanish ancestry. His parents, Anthony Farragut and Juana Mesquida, came of a long line of distinguished ancestry which had served five centuries in prominent places in Army, Government and Church. George was educated in Barcelona, learned seafaring, and landed in America in 1776 in time to join the colonies in their fight for independence; soon rated a captain and is reputed to have saved the life of Col. William Washington at the battle of the Cowpens.

After the war, settled in eastern Tennessee, was commissioned a Major of Calvary; built houses and acquired land. In 1807 commissioned a Sailing Master in the U. S. Navy and assigned to the Gulf of Mexico; bought land in Spanish West Florida, on the Pascagoula, now in Jackson County, Miss. In 1808 moved his family to New Orleans and in that year his wife died of Yellow Fever; he seems to have kept up homes in both places. In 1811 and again in 1813, George Farragut was appointed a Justice of the Peace for the Parish of Pascagoula, lying on the Pascagoula. In 1814, he retired to private life and it is not thought that he took part in the War of 1812. He spent the remainder of his life at this home on the Pascagoula where he died and was buried in 1817.

MAJOR GEORGEYANTHONY MAGIN FARRAGUT
Dora Cirlo^t

For two generations, the family of Major George Anthony Magin Farragut added several interesting pages to the history of the present Jackson county area. He was born a British subject on the island of Minorca in 1755, living there until he joined the merchant service at the age of ten. A thoroughly experienced seaman at nineteen, he then captained his own vessel, trading in Havana, Vera Cruz, and New Orleans Louisiana, which was a Spanish possession at this time.

While trading in the American ports during the Revolution at Charleston, South Carolina, he joined the American navy. Sustaining a wound in action, he, then, became attached to the ground forces of General Francis Marion in the Carolinas.

After the Revolution Major Farragut fought in the Indian Wars and was commissioned a Major of the Horse. While living in Knox county, Tennessee he met and married Elizabeth Shine. The children born to this marriage were William, born 1797, James Glasgow (later naming himself David), born 1801, Nancy, Elizabeth, and George Antoine.

Through the Major's friendship with William Claiborne, the Governor of the Louisiana Province, he was chosen to fill a mission of diplomacy since he could speak and write the English language, to create a spirit of loyalty between the French and Spanish speaking residents of the colony and the³ English speaking Americans, after the Louisiana Purchase in 1803.

197

For this mission he was stationed at the New Orleans Naval Station as a Master, from which he commuted in a yawl to his home at West Pascagoula where he had received a land grant in 1804 of five hundred acres designated as Port ^{POINT} ^{Raguet} Plaquet, later Farragut Point, where he had built a sturdy home for his family.

While commuting from the New Orleans Naval Station to his home he found the well known United States Naval Captain, David Porter, senior in a boat on Lake Ponchartrain ill of a high fever. He took him to his home in West Pascagoula where Mrs Farragut nursed him. She contracted the fever and both died the same day of yellow fever, in 1808.

Soon after the death of Captain Porter, his son arrived to express his gratitude for the care given his father, offering to take Major Farragut's son Glasgow with him to enter the United States Navy, and one of the daughters to live with his sister in New Orleans, Louisiana.

It was not until 1811 that the Spanish finally agreed to become loyal citizens of the United States. In that year on January 2, George Farragut raised for the first time the flag of the United States over Pascagoula. Shortly thereafter, he was named the first Justice of the Peace in Pascagoula Parish, enjoying a position of prominence and prosperity during the latter part of his life. It was at Farragut Point that he died on June 4, 1817. He was buried in an open field, however the grave is not marked and its exact location is unknown. Was a glass covered tomb

PERSONALITY

Seaman, guerrilla, artilleryman and cavalry officer George Farragut was a versatile hero.

By Richard K. Munro

Born on Minorca, then part of the British empire, George Farragut served the cause of American independence in more than one capacity.

ARMED FORCES HISTORY COLLECTIONS NATIONAL MUSEUM OF AMERICAN HISTORY

BEHIND THE BIG NAMES of the American War for Independence were numerous supporting players whose equally vital contributions are remembered only dimly. It is possible, however, to sketch the life and service of one Spanish-American, George Farragut, who may have been the most versatile hero of the Revolution. He fought the British at sea as a privateer and South Carolina Navy officer, and on land as a guerrilla, artillery and cavalry officer. Postwar, as an American citizen, he also sired the most important naval figure of a subsequent generation. Years later, U.S. Navy Admiral David Glasgow Farragut proudly recounted how his father came "to assist with his life and his fortune in the struggle of American Independence."

George Farragut was born Don Jorge Ferragut Mesqueda (he later Anglicized his name) on September 29, 1755, to Antonio Ferragut and Juana Mesqueda on the Spanish island of Minorca. Farragut was not a Spanish subject, however; Minorca had been ceded to Britain in 1713, and though the French seized it in 1755, it returned to British rule at the end of the Seven Years' War in 1763.

Jorge went away to sea at age 10. By 1773, he was trading in the Caribbean, no doubt smuggling Spanish wines, Cuban cigars and other sundries to his friend Fernando Leigh in Norfolk, Va., whose father, Colonel William Leigh, gave him an entrée into social circles in the southern colonies. During that time, too, Farragut's antipathy toward the British for their long occupation of Minorca probably made him receptive to the new political ideas to which he was exposed in North America.

Late in the spring of 1775, Farragut, now a captain, sailed into the Spanish-owned port of New Orleans, where he learned that a band of militiamen in the Massachusetts colony had defied the British army on April 19. Farragut set sail at once for Port-au-Prince on the island of Saint-Domingue (now Haiti), to exchange his entire cargo for cannons, muskets, powder, shot and ball. March 1776 saw him boldly sailing for the Carolinas, laden with arms for the rebelling colonists.

The young Minorcan volunteered to serve as an officer aboard a rebel privateer of 12 guns. Farragut was later appointed a first lieutenant in the state navy of South Carolina. When Savannah was occupied by the British on December 29, 1778, Farragut escaped to Charleston. There, he fought at sea until the overwhelming firepower of the Royal Navy compelled the Americans to withdraw and transfer their cannons to the Continental Army. During the siege of Charleston, Farragut commanded a gun battery, later recalling that he "burnt as much powder and with as much annoyance to the enemy as any one officer in the American Army."

IN DECEMBER 1779, British Lt. Gen. Henry Clinton moved toward Charleston, leading a 90-ship invasion force carrying 8,500 soldiers and 5,000 sailors and marines. On May 12, 1780, cut off by a cordon of British troops under Lt. Gen. Charles, Lord Cornwallis, Maj. Gen. Benjamin Lincoln was forced to surrender the city, along with the 5,466 Continental Army and militia troops under his command. Farragut was among them, but a fellow Spaniard, Juan de Miralles, succeeded in arranging his liberty through a prisoner exchange.

Farragut, ever combative, was soon back at sea, though not for long. Sailing from Philadelphia aboard a privateer, he encountered a more heavily armed British vessel. During the ensuing engagement, a musket ball struck his right arm, but prompt work by the ship's surgeon saved the limb.

BULL RUN to BULL MARKET

Beautiful American rare coins like these are a shining example of our nation's ability to endure. Minted during the tumultuous Civil War years, they too survived. In fact, the demand for them continues to grow stronger while the supply dwindles, making them an investment of real value, especially in today's tangible asset bull market.

After a short convalescence, Farragut joined a new Continental Army expedition commanded by Maj. Gen. Nathanael Greene. Arriving in the Carolinas, Greene split his 3,000 troops into two columns. The smaller force, commanded by Brig. Gen. Daniel Morgan, included a ragged band of scarcely 100 cavalymen under Lt. Col. William Washington. Among the troopers was Lieutenant Farragut.

At Cowpens in South Carolina on January 17, 1781, Morgan was pursued by a British flying column led by the dashing but ruthless Lt. Col. Banastre "Bloody Ban" Tarleton, while Cornwallis had set out to engage Greene's larger column. To make the most of his assets, Morgan placed his poorly trained militia ahead of his more-disciplined Continental line infantry, with orders to fire just two volleys before retiring to the rear. Washington's cavalry lay farther to the rear on a low ridge, sheltered from British fire. As Morgan had planned, after his militia fired their two volleys and ran, Tarleton's advancing troops broke ranks into a disorderly pursuit—and right into a devastating volley from Morgan's waiting Virginian and Maryland Continentals. At that decisive moment, Washington's horse flanked Tarleton's right, and the militia returned to enfilade his left. Farragut took part in the cavalry charge and by his own account saved Washington's life during a desperate hand-to-hand encounter with Tarleton. Tarleton, himself wounded, escaped with a mere 10 percent of his men. The once-elite Tarleton's Legion had been effectively annihilated.

FOLLOWING COWPENS, North Carolina's Governor Abner Nash appointed Farragut to command an artillery detachment, with which he saw action in a skirmish at Beaufort Bridge. Artillery proved to be vulnerable, difficult to move and harder to supply in South Carolina, so Farragut raised a cavalry troop from North Carolina for his command. When Cornwallis moved through the Carolinas in 1781, he found both Farragut and Colonel Francis Marion's mounted guerillas harrying his rear and flanks. During those operations George W. Siever, son of Brig. Gen. John Siever, described Farragut "as a short, chunky man; very brave and a funny genius." Details of his service alongside Marion are not known, but on May 5, 1783, he was promoted to major of cavalry. Meanwhile, as one consequence of Spain's allying with the American rebellion, an expeditionary force landed on Minorca on February 5, 1782, and restored it to Spanish rule.

The Treaty of Paris on September 3, 1783, brought British recognition of American independence, but the new nation could not finance an army or a navy. Farragut said that “the peace which soon followed left my adopted Country free and independent but your Memorialist poor and penniless.” In those lean years Farragut returned to the sea.

Farragut's friend, Tennessee Governor William Blount, appointed him second major of a militia cavalry regiment. On March 1, 1792, Blount promoted Farragut to muster master for all the militia of eastern Tennessee. Farragut again saw combat in 1793, against the Creek and Cherokee Indians in Georgia. In 1795 he married Elizabeth Shine, a cool-headed, hard-working and courageous Irish-American woman of 30. She would bear him several children, including James Glasgow Farragut on July 5, 1801.

In the wake of the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, George Farragut returned to naval service on the Mississippi River, patrolling and occasionally settling border disputes with the Spanish in East Florida. In 1808 he cared for a mortally ailing old naval acquaintance named David Porter, who was buried at the same time as Elizabeth Farragut, a victim of yellow fever. As a consequence of that visit, son James Farragut chose to join the U.S. Navy and serve as a midshipman aboard the frigate Essex. It was commanded by the late Porter's son, Captain David Porter Jr., who became a second father to the boy. The grateful youngster honored his mentor by adopting David as his own first name.

The Spanish have a saying, “De tal palo tal astilla”—from a tree such as George Farragut one could expect a splendid splinter. George Farragut, who died in Pascagoula on June 4, 1817, at age 62, never abandoned the flag of his adopted country—and neither did David Glasgow Farragut when Tennessee and Louisiana seceded from the Union in 1861, despite his mother's and his wife's Southern connections. Applying the soul of a conquistador to the fleets he commanded throughout the Civil War, he would add, “Damn the torpedoes! Full speed ahead!” to U.S. Navy tradition. MH

FARRAGUT, GEORGE (Sept. 29, 1755-June 4, 1817), naval and army officer, was born in Ciudadela, the capital of Minorca, when that Spanish island was a British possession. He was the son of Anthony Ferragut and Juana Mesquida, both of Spanish extraction. For more than five centuries members of the Ferragut family had held prominent offices in Minorca in the army, the government, and the church.

George was sent to school at Barcelona but at the age of ten he went to sea and from 1765 to 1772 was employed chiefly in the Mediterranean. Toward the end of this period, while in the Russian service, he aided in the destruction of a Turkish fleet as one of the crew of a fireship that set fire to the fleet. In 1773-75 he was employed in the American seas trading chiefly between Havana and Vera Cruz. In the latter year at New Orleans on hearing of the difficulties between Great Britain and her colonies, he resolved to devote his life and fortune to the service of the Americans. Proceeding to Port-au-Prince he exchanged his cargo for cannon, arms, and ammunition and sailed for Charleston, S. C., where he arrived in 1776. Following a period of service as a lieutenant on a privateer, he was appointed, in 1778, a first lieutenant in the South Carolina navy. After superintending the construction of some of the galleys of that state, he was given the command of one of them and going to sea fought a severe action in the Savannah River.

In 1779 Farragut assisted at the defense of Savannah and in the following year was actively employed at the siege of Charleston, on the fall of which city he was taken prisoner. When exchanged he went to sea on board a privateer and in an engagement had his right arm badly shattered by a musket ball. The use of his arm he never fully recovered. Giving up sea service he made his way to Gen. Marion's headquarters, where he acted as a volunteer. He also served in that capacity at the battle of Cowpens. Then, proceeding to Wilmington, N. C., he was appointed by Gov. Nash of that state to the command of a company of volunteer artillery, which took part in the battle of Beaufort Bridge. When Cornwallis invaded North Carolina, Farragut raised a company of volunteer cavalry with which he harassed the rear of the army of the enemy as it marched into Virginia. The state of North Carolina made him a captain of cavalry and for his military services he received the thanks of Gen. Marion and of the governor of South Carolina.

After the Revolution Farragut earned a livelihood as a mariner until 1792 when Gen. Blount, governor of the Southwest Territory, invited him to take up his residence in Knoxville and appointed him a major of militia. In 1793 he served under Gen. Sevier in an expedition against the Cherokees. Farragut remained in Tennessee until 1807 when President Jefferson made him a sailing master in the navy, and in that year he removed to New Orleans and took command of a naval gunboat. In 1811 he was ordered to the Bay of Pascagoula, Miss., near which he had a large plantation. He was in the navy until discharged, Mar. 25, 1814. His last military service was performed at the battle of New Orleans.

In 1795 Farragut married Elizabeth Shine (1765-1808), who was born in Dobbs County, N. C. Of this union five children were born, the two eldest of whom, William A. C. and David G. Farragut [q.v.], were officers in the navy. Farragut died at Point Plaquet, West Pascagoula, Miss. He was a man of courage, a restless adventurer, "by profession a mariner," a fit sire for a great naval officer.

FARRAR, EDGAR HOWARD (June 20, 1849-Jan. 6, 1922), lawyer, for more than forty years an outstanding figure in the legal and political life of Louisiana, and New Orleans, was born at Concordia, La., the son of Thomas Prince and Anna (Girault) Farrar. He spent his early life in the Mississippi Delta and attended school in Baton Rouge, proceeding thence to the University of Virginia, where he graduated with the degree of M.A. in 1871. He then studied law at the University of Louisiana, was admitted to the bar in 1872, and commenced practise in New Orleans. Giving special attention to municipal and corporation law, he quickly established himself as an authority on those subjects, and in 1878 became assistant city attorney, being appointed city attorney two years later. In 1882, he was appointed by Paul Tulane [q.v.] one of the trustees of the fund to establish a university in Louisiana and for years thereafter devoted much of his time to the furtherance of the project. Meanwhile, induced by his experiences as city attorney, he turned his attention to municipal reform. He assisted in the organization and for many years was chairman of the Executive Commit-

Subject: YOU FOUND MINA FARRAGUT!

Dear Sherry Owens,

You can imagine my feeling last night as I read your email.. we have been searching for Mina Farragut for three years!

The kind folk at Solano County Recorder's office..this morning... read me by telephone the death record of Mina Farragut Payne. Mina lived at 1015 Porter Street #308 in Vallejo, California. Her next of kin was a daughter, Mrs. Suzan E. Gray of 221 Tennessee St., Vallejo, California.

Mina's parents were identified as being Wallace Farragut and Anna Rose Lapin. So you see there is no doubt that this is the REAL Mina! (Sadly, Wallace and Anna Rose were listed as born - each - in Mexico. Of course they were born in Louisiana and South Dakota.)

I am trying to contact Mrs. Gray, but there is no listing for her at this address. We would certainly like to know more about her mother post-W.W. II.

There is unbelievable coincidences here. As you well know, the names Porter and Tennessee are very much a part of the legacy of both Jorge and David Glasgow Farragut.

As we speak the the tenth Reunion of the USS Farragut survivors is occurring at the Holiday Inn Hotel in Reno, Nevada. I of course have transmitted your information (and that of Else Martin) to these shipmates yesterday and today by email and fax.

* *

CFO Don Barnier of the USS Farragut who with his shipmates survived Pearl Harbor lost his dear wife Eileen Barnier to a heart attack in September, 1997. Don initiated the search for Mina..in fact he was the person who contacted the USO in 1942 and asked that Mina Farragut come to San Francisco to dedicate the ship. Don and I have homes on the Pacific Ocean 50 miles north of San Francisco, at Bodega Bay. Eileen's ashes rest in the Ocean west of Bodega Bay..

The Solano County Recorder, this morning, informed us that Mina Farragut

Subject: Fwd: Obit of Mina Farragut Payne

Hi there,

Hope you're feeling better, Betty told me that you were having all kinds of tests run. I took the mail by the archives after I left work today - just a bank statement and a Ft. Maurpas book order - and she said she had spoken to you. We had about decided you'd left town.

Got this email just tonight. Thought you'd be interested in reading it. Will forward the communication with Mrs. Gray when he sends that, too. Looks like he found Mina's daughter!

If you're up to it, Harry wanted me to find out how we can get more History of Jackson County books and also those unbound Catholic Records books. Don't know if Betty told you, but the Mobile Diocese called and wanted to know if we had those records on computer - if I understand correctly, they want to put out a whole set of books like the New Orleans Catholic Diocese books. She was going to send them her copy of the book and just get a replacement for hers when we get some more books ready. Are they in that house behind the library?

Well, I didn't mean to go on and on like this. Don't want to tire you.

Miss you,
 Sherry

From books "David Glasgow Farragut", Our First Admiral and "Admiral in the Making" by Prof. Charles Lee Lewis of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. Copyright 1941:

David's father, George Anthony Magin Garragut was born Sept. 29, 1755 at Ciudadella on the island of Minorca of excellent Spanish stock. He died June 4, 1817 on his plantation in west Pascagoula, Mississippi.

His mother was Elizabeth Shine, born June 7, 1765 in Lenoir County, N. C. near Kinston. She died of yellow fever in New Orleans, near Lake Ponchatrain on June 22, 1808, where the family had settled. She had nursed Capt. David Porter's father until his death in 1808, which occurred on the same day she died.

After her death it became necessary at once to provide care for her children, who were very small. They were placed with different families because the father, George Farragut was on duty on Gunboat 13 in New Orleans and couldn't take care of them.

The oldest child, William Augustus Claiborne Farragut had become an active midshipman on the New Orleans station March 14, 1808. After his marriage his children were Glasgow, twins Fineit and Pamalee, who married brothers by the name of Raby and a daughter who married a Flotte.

James Glasgow Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was taken under the wing of Capt. David Porter, who was very grateful to Mrs. Farragut for her kindness in nursing his father. James later changed his name to David, in admiration and love for his guardian Capt. Porter.

Nancy Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was adopted by William Boswell and in 1826 she married Louis Gourlie and lived in Pascagoula, Mississippi, until her death on June 6th, 1883. She lived in a house picturesquely situated on the river and was known as a very gracious hostess.

Elizabeth was placed in the care of a Mrs. Dupont near Pascagoula. She married Celestin Dupont and had four children: Eugenie, Zulme, Isadore and Louis. Mrs. Dupont apparently died before the Civil War.

Both sons and husbands of the daughters were in the Confederate Service.

George Antoine Farragut, the youngest child, died at the age of ten by drowning in the vicinity of New Orleans.

The Farraguts started life in a log cabin in Tennessee and the father, George, ran a ferry. They went to New Orleans on a flatboat, which took weeks and settled near Lake Ponchatrain. This was in 1807 and shortly thereafter George, the father, bought a plantation of 900 acres in West Pascagoula on the Pascagoula River where it flowed into Mississippi Sound. It was named Point Plaquet, later Farragut's Point.

W. J. Farragut, et al., Defendants.

complaint, and delivered the same to said complainant as therein recited; but they aver that their sole object and purpose in signing said agreement was to facilitate the sale of said land to said Glenn, and with no intention of relinquishing their claim for the purchase money of their pro rata share of said land.

Further answering, defendants say, that they admit that said complainant after deducting $200, from the amount received by him from said Glenn for said land, offered to surrender the balance of said sum, to wit, $1800, to the parties entitled thereto. They admit that the parties to said conveyance to said Glenn, claimed said lands as the heirs at law, and distributees of W. A. G. Farragut, D. G. Farragut, Mrs. Nancy Gurlie, and Mrs. Eliza Dupont, all of whom are now dead; these defendants admit that they are the rightful heirs of said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, who inherited an undivided one fourth interest in said land from the estate of her deceased father George Farragut; and that the other defendants to this bill are the rightful heirs of said W. A. G. Farragut, who also inherited an undivided one fourth interest in said land from the estate of said George Farragut. They further admit that they claimed one fourth of the money in the hands of said complainant arising from the sale of said land, to wit the sum of $450, which they aver was their rightful share thereof as heirs at law of said Mrs. Eliza Dupont. They further admit that the other defendants to this suit, the heirs of said W. A. G. Farragut, set up a claim to the said one fourth of said money belonging to these defendants, alleging that their said father had purchased from said Mrs. Eliza Dupont during her life time the undivided one fourth interest in said land belonging to her as an heir at law of said George Farragut, which claim these defendants aver was without any foundation, based upon a false statement of facts, and done for the purpose of depriving these defendants out of their rightful share of the proceeds of the sale of said lands. They further admit that said complainant was a mere stake-holder, and had no interest in said fund so held by him. And now having fully answered all the allegations of the bill of complaint in this cause admitting same, these defendants accept the issue tendered by the heirs of the said W. A. C. Farragut, in their said answer filed July 20th, 1892, and in response to the allegations therein contained, say: That Eliza Dupont, in said land; they further deny that said W. A. C. Farragut, paid said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, any consideration therefor, or that said Mrs. Eliza Dupont ever executed or acknowledged any legal or valid deed of conveyance therefor; they further deny that any deed from said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, to said W. A. C. Farragut, for her interest in said land, was ever lost or destroyed, for the reason that no such deed ever existed. They further deny that said W. A. C. Farragut, or his heirs have ever had actual, uninterrupted, and continuous adverse possession, of the undivided one fourth interest in said lands belonging originally to the said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, under claim of title as against the said Mrs. Dupont, and these defendants for more than ten years; and they aver and charge the fact to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut, nor any one claiming under him has had any possession of said land for any length of time, that was adverse or hostile to the claim and right of entry of either the said Mrs. Dupont, or these defendants. They further aver and charge it to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut nor his said

County, and deny that said defendants were ever informed that such deed had been of record; they deny that any deed from said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, to said W. A. C. Farragut, for her interest in said land, was ever lost or destroyed, for the reason that no such deed ever existed. They further deny that said W. A. C. Farragut, or his heirs have ever had actual, uninterrupted, and continuous adverse possession, of the undivided one fourth interest in said lands belonging originally to the said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, under claim of title as against the said Mrs. Dupont, and these defendants for more than ten years; and they aver and charge the fact to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut, nor any one claiming under him has had any possession of said land for any length of time, that was adverse or hostile to the claim and right of entry of either the said Mrs. Dupont, or these defendants. They further aver and charge it to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut nor his said land was ever recorded in the record of deeds of Jackson Dupont, to said W. A. C. Farragut, for her interest in said land; they further deny that any deed from said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, to said W. A. C. Farragut, paid said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, any consideration therefor, or that said Mrs. Eliza Dupont ever executed or acknowledged any legal or valid deed of conveyance therefor; they further deny that any deed from said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, to said W. A. C. Farragut, for her interest in said land, was ever lost or destroyed, for the reason that no such deed ever existed. They further deny that said W. A. C. Farragut, or his heirs have ever had actual, uninterrupted, and continuous adverse possession, of the undivided one fourth interest in said lands belonging originally to the said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, under claim of title as against the said Mrs. Dupont, and these defendants for more than ten years; and they aver and charge the fact to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut, nor any one claiming under him has had any possession of said land for any length of time, that was adverse or hostile to the claim and right of entry of either the said Mrs. Dupont, or these defendants. They further aver and charge it to be true, that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut nor his said children, have been in possession of said land for the past ten years at all, unless plundering said land of all the pine timber by said W. J. Farragut, without the consent of the other and coowners thereof, would constitute an adverse possession; they further aver that the only possession ever had by said W. A. C. Farragut, or his said heirs, was that of a tenant in coparcenary with the descendants of the said George Farragut, and that his possession, and that of his said heirs, was the possession of all the heirs at law, or descendants of heirs of the said George Farragut; they further aver that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut, nor his said heirs have ever held said land in any more hostile, or adverse manner towards the said Mrs Dupont, or these defendants, than they have towards the other heirs of said George Farragut, and their descendants, whose claim they have expressly recognized: they further aver that neither the said W. A. C. Farragut nor his said heirs, have ever in any manner ousted the said Mrs Dupont, or these defendants of their share or interest in said land, or ever in any manner given them notice of an intention to hold said land as against them adversely, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion.

Further answering, these defendants say, that they are not advised whether the heirs of said W. A. C. Farragut, ever heard these defendants claiming their interest in said lands or not; they admit that they never had any posters printed setting forth their claim, nor any public proclamation made announcing it, but aver that no action in asserting their said claim was necessary on their part to charge said defendants with notice thereof, or that their failure to serve notice upon the other defendants to this suit that they still claimed said land was necessary to enable them to inherit the share of their said mother therein. They admit that when the sale to said Glenn was about to be consummated, that the said W. J. Farragut, came to these defendants and asked them to quit claim their interest in said land to the heirs of said W. A. C. Farragut, which these defendants refused to do unless paid their pro rata share of the proceeds of the sale of said land; they further show that said heirs of said W. A. C. Farragut stated at the time they demanded said quit claim deed, that their mother the said Eliza Dupont had executed a conveyance for her share or interest in said land many years ago to the said W. A. C. Farragut; that these defendants denied that any such deed had ever been executed, but offered to sign a quit claim deed for said land if competent proof was produced establishing the fact that such a deed had ever existed; that the only proof furnished them that their said mother had conveyed said land, was an uncorroborated, and exceedingly fishy story by said W. J. Farragut, ^{one of the interested parties} that he had seen the deed, whereupon these defendants positively refused to execute such a deed, but signed the written agreement set forth in the bill of complaint in this suit.

And now having fully answered the said bill of complaint, and all the affirmative allegations in the answer of the other defendants hereto, these defendants pray, that the Court will decree the payment of the fund now in Court to them, and will dismiss the claim of said heirs of said W. A. C. Farragut thereto with cost of this proceeding, and they pray for such other further and general relief in the premises, as to the Court shall seem meet or in equity and justice they are entitled to receive.

1 Farragut, of the state of New York, sold
2 and conveyed to one Robt. L. Gleim
3 et al. for the price and sum of Two
4 Thousand Dollars, a certain Tract of 5 land in said County surveyed and
6 designated as Section No 4 in Township
7 7 S of Range 6 W and subdivision in
8 section No 37 in Township 7 S of Range
9 7 west, known as the George Farragut
10 claim or confirmation which was con-
11 firmed to the said George Farragut by the 12 United States on Dec 10, 1856.

13 That at the time of making the said
14 conveyance the said parties to said
15 sale entered into and executed a written 16 agreement by which they agreed that 17 the said purchase money be paid
18 by the said vendors therein, to John
19 complainant, and that John complainant,
20 after deducting therefrom ten per cent
21 thereof which should be in full of 22 all his charges and out of which
23 he should pay all expenses incurred
24 in and about negotiating and consum-
25 mating said sale, including the attorney,

2
1 for preparing papers, examining
2 and perfecting titles &c. that he should 3 divide among them the balance as
4 they should agree upon in such manner
5 as they should adopt.

6 Complainant would further show to 7 your Honor that the said $2000 has 8 been paid to him, and that after de-
9 ducting the said ten per cent, he is 10 and has, ever since the same was 11 paid to him, been ready and willing 12 to divide the said balance which
13 is the sum of Eight Hundred Dollars
14 ($800⁰⁰) among said parties, but that 15 a dispute has arisen with respect to 16 the rights of said parties to share therein,
17 in this, to wit: The said parties claim
18 the said lands as the rightful heirs
19 of W. A. C. Farragut, D. G. Farragut, Mrs. Eliza
20 Dupont and Mrs. Nancy Guelin, all of 21 whom, now deceased were the children and 22 only heirs of George Farragut, the original
23 owner thereof, also long since deceased.
24 The said William G. Farragut, Mrs. Mary
25 T. Rabby, Mrs. Parmela Rabby, Nicholas G.

4 1 Farragut, Mrs. Melphie Floth and Mrs. Emma
2 Gonzales, are the heirs of the said W.A.C.
3 Farragut, whose undivided interest in the 4 said land was one fourth part, which 5 they take as tenants in coparcenary. That
6 the said Celeste Dupont, Mrs. Eugenia McNeil,
7 Gulme Dupont, Isadore Dupont, Louis
8 Dupont, Alfred E. Dupont and Mrs. Rosa
9 Ladwin, are the rightful heirs of the 10 said Mrs. Eliza Dupont, dec'd, and claim 11 the undivided one fourth interest of their 12 said mother in said lands, and that 13 they are entitled to the one fourth of 14 said Money, which is the sum of $450.
15 To be divided between them in equal
16 part. To this claim of the said heirs
17 of Mrs. Eliza Dupont the said heirs
18 of the said W.A.C. Farragut object and 19 protest, and claim that their said father
20 during his life time, bought of the said
21 Mrs. Eliza Dupont, during her life time,
22 her undivided one fourth interest
23 in said land, and received from her
24 a deed of conveyance therefor, which 25 deed has been lost or destroyed,

5
1 and that they, the heirs of the said
2 W. A. C. Farragut are entitled to receive 3 the portion of said money claimed by 4 said Dupont heirs, and that said
5 Dupont heirs are not entitled to any
6 part of said money.

7 Inasmuch, therefore, as your com-
8 plainant is merely a stake holder for 9 said parties, having no interest in the 10 said money so held by him, and
11 the said controversy involving matters
12 not proper for him to undertake to de-13 termine, he is unwilling to take the 14 risk of deciding said controversy or of 15 paying said money to either of such 16 parties, he prays your Honor that, the 17 premises considered, a summons issue
18 to all of said defendants requiring that 19 they appear before this Honorable Court.

20 at the August Term thereof, and that they
21 be then and there be required to interplead
22 and take issue between them with reference
23 to their respective rights to said money,
24 and that on final hearing your Honor will
25 decree to whom and how the said money

1 shall be distributed and paid, and
2 that your complainant may have
3 such other and further relief in 4 the premises as will comport
5 with equity and good conscience.

8 To The Honorable Chancery Court
9 of said County:

10 The defendants herein, William
11 J. Farragut, Mrs. Mary T. Raby, Mrs.
12 Parmelia Raby, Nicholas G. Farragut,
13 Mrs. Delphine Elott and Mrs. Emma 14 Gonzales, for separate answer to com-
15 plainant's bill of complaint say:

16 That they admit the sale of the land
17 described in the bill of complaint to Robt.
18 L. Glenn et al. on the 18th day of March,
19 which conveyance was made jointly
20 by them, the remaining defendants herein
21 and Loyall Farragut, as alleged in said
22 bill of complaint. They also admit that 23 at the time of making said sale they 24 entered into a written agreement with 25 the said complainant in terms and in

7 effect as alleged and set out in said
1 bill of complaint.

2 They also admit that on receiving said
3 money the said complainant manifested
4 a willingness to divide the same, that he 5 properly deducted $200⁰⁰ therefrom and 6 that $1800 was the proper balance sub-
7 ject to division among the parties
8 entitled thereto. They also admit that 9 the parties to the said conveyance and 10 contract claimed the said lands as 11 heirs of W. A. C. Farragut, D. G. Farragut,
12 Mrs. Eliza Depont and Mrs. Nancy Gulie,
13 now deceased, who inherited the same
14 from their father George Farragut, died., 15 that these defendants are the heirs of the 16 said W. A. C. Farragut whose interest
17 in said land was an undivided one
18 fourth as inherited from said ancestor
19 Geo. Farragut, and that the remaining
20 defendants herein are the rightful heirs
21 of the said Mrs. Eliza Depont, who in-
22 herited and undivided one fourth interest
23 in said land from her said father Geo.
24 Farragut, which interest her said
25

heirs now claim and that they also claimed a one fourth interest in said money, and that these defendants protested against its being paid to them on the ground that the said father of these defendants, the said W. A. C. Farragut, during his life time, purchased of the said
Mrs. Eliza Dupont, during her life time,
all of her undivided interest in said land, and obtained from her a paper dud of conveyance therefor, which dud has been lost or destroyed, and that they, as the heirs of the said W. A. C.
Farragut were entitled to the said
fourth interest claimed by the heirs of the said Mrs. Dupont.

They admit that the said complainant was merely a stake holder, having no interest in said money as held by him

And now having fully answered the said bill of complaint, admitting the truth of all the material allegations thereof, these defendants herewith tender

1 issue with the said defendants Celeste
2 Dupont, Mrs. Eugenie McNeil, Zulma
3 Dupont, Isadore Dupont, Louis Dupont,
4 Alfred S. Dupont and Mrs. Rosa Ladnier,
5 in the matter of their claim to said
6 money, and show to the Court that the 7 claim to said money by these defendants
8 four orators, for the reasons and 9 on the grounds set out in said bill
10 of complaint is just, true and right,
11 and they do now affirm that their
12 said father that their said father
13 W. A. C. Farragut, during his life, 14 many years ago, the exact date of 15 which is now to your orators un-
16 known, bought the interest of the 17 said Eliza Dupont in said land.
18 paid her a valuable consideration
19 therefor, and that the said Eliza
20 Dupont duly conveyed the same
21 to him by deed fully executed and 22 acknowledged, as they are informed
23 and believe and will offer to prove 24 on final hearing. And they also allege,
25 on information and belief, that the

1 said deed was duly recorded in the 2 record of deeds of said county, but
3 that the said records have been de-
4 stroyed by fire and that said original
5 deed has, since the death of their said
6 father, been accidentally lost or des-
7 troyed.

8 These defendants further affirm
9 that they had actual, uninterrupted,
10 and continuous adverse possession
11 of the said one fourth interest in 12 the said lands originally owned
13 by the said Mrs. Dupont, under claim
14 of title and ownership as against
15 the said Mrs. Dupont and her said
16 heirs for more than ten years
17 next before this dispute arose.

18 And they further state that neither
19 the said Mrs. Dupont, since her sale
20 of the said interest as aforesaid,
21 nor her said heirs have even,
22 to their knowledge, claimed any
23 interest in said lands until this 24 dispute, but that owing to the 25 loss of their said deed the said

6
1 Glenn, to whom said lands were sold
2 as alleged in complainant's bill, required
3 that your orators procure either a
4 quit claim deed from said Dupont
5 heirs to supply such loss and con-
6 sequent defect in their title or that 7 said Dupont heirs sign the deed to 8 him for the purpose of clearing his
9 title upon the records. That they, there-
10 upon requested said heirs to give
11 them such quit-claim deed to satisfy
12 said demand, but that when informed
13 that the said deed from their mother
14 had been lost they declined to give
15 such quit claim ~~deeds~~ but agreed
16 to sign the deed to said Glenn and that 17 the purchase money be paid to the said
18 A. L. Moore to be by him divided in 19 such manner as the parties should
20 mutually agree upon; that said agree-
21 ment was made in view of the said
22 dispute and to facilitate the the said
23 sale, with the idea of a subsequent 24 agreement upon some method by which
25 to settle such dispute after said

17.
1 sale should be consummated, and
2 substituting the said purchase money
3 for the land for the subject of the 4 cross claims.

5 These defendants therefore pray
6 that the said remaining defendants
7 be required to interplead with them
8 and that upon a final hearing
9 your Honor will decree that the 10 said money, to wit: $45000 deposited 11 by said Complainant be paid to 12 these defendants, and for such 13 other and further relief as to your 14 Honor may seem meet. And
15 in duty bound they will ever pray

History does not record the boyhood days of Admiral Farragut on Pascagoula river and Pascagoula bay, of his childish hopes and ambition to someday sail the sea, but the greatest stories of the civil war ever told in this section by old Rebels to their children and their grandchildren was of the night that the United States fleet was attacked by a fleet of fishing boats and how David Farragut captured his own home town.

Farragut's Boyhood on Gulf Coast Where Father

Owned Grande Ecore is Remembered

Pascagoula, Miss., March 2. When Carol

Mansfield portrayed in a recent issue of the Times

Pascagoula the naval battle on Mobile Bay during the Civil war between the flotilla of Union warships commanded by Admiral David G. Farragut and Confederate sea and land forces, older residents recalled that the hand of fate played a part to prevent prevent the famous Admiral from claiming Pascagoula

as his birthplace. They also revived some bits of almost forgotten local history in connection with the boyhood of the Admiral and of the beautiful estate three miles north of Pascagoula River which was the future admirals ancestral home.

Grande Ecore, the place is called the part is still in tact comprises 635 Acres but it might have been larger than this if the original grant of the King of Spain to David Glascoe Farragut was consulted. David Glascoe Farragut was the father of Admiral Farragut. He was born at Monica emigrated to the United States, fought in the Revolutionary war and coming to the Spanish possession

in the South received a grant of land from the King of Spain. This he called Grande Ecore.

Here the elder Farragut resided and at one time served as a magistrate in this section of the

Wm. C. Claiborne

Mississippi Territory.

Many years ago passed into the hand of Northern purchases and until December of 1925 the title was vested in Mrs. Sarah Glenn, who resides in the North. It was acquired in that year by J. N. Flowers. A former attorney-general of Miss. and J. L. Smith both of Jackson, making but three owners since 1776.

In 1801 David Glascoe Farragut and his wife were either visiting or ~~and~~ temporarily residing at Knoxville, Tennessee, and it was in that city that the future great Admiral was born. They returned to Jackson County, and the boy lived on the ancestral farm. His father died when he was seven years old and the boy was adopted by A Captain Admiral Porter, a friend of the family, who had frequently visited Grande Ecore and had become attached to the boy. At a tender age young Farragut saw service in the War of 1812, and eventually became a sailor, winning promotions until he attained the rank of admiral.

His exploits in the Civil Ware are history but not so much has been written of his boyhood life spent on the banks of the Pascagoula~~a~~ river in sight of the great bay which must have fired his hopes and aroused his ambitions to some day sail the sea on his own account .

The Farragut place has been known also as the Glenn place, and a large lake near the bluffs which over look the river is known as Glenn's Lake. In recent years small sawmills have operated in that locality, storing logs in the lake and barging the lumber down the river, but history left no distinguishing marks and fields and banks that had known the tread of a future great admiral were but another of the many beautiful places on Pascagoula River.

There are a number of Admiral Farraguts relatives still living in Pascagoula. The admiral died in 1870

Cat Island has had a dark and bloody history. It has been the scene of some of the most horrible and inhuman deeds ever recorded.

In 1757 Governor Kerlerec appointed the Sieur Duroux as Commandant of the Island, giving him a detachment of marines and of a Swiss regiment. Duroux was a tyrant. He compelled his soldiers to work for him in the most menial way, and when they disobeyed he had them stripped of all clothing and tied them to trees.

Suicides were not infrequent on the Island to escape the horrible torture meted out to these unfortunate "subjects". In 1758 two men were court-martialed and sentenced to be "broken on the wheel and their bodies thrown into the sea". A Swiss soldier was condemned "to be placed in a coffin and be sawed alived through the middle of the body". according to the custom of the Swiss regiment.

Cat Island contains 2078.01 acres (old records) much of which is unfit for cultivation. Juan de Cuevas (or Quave it is sometimes written) claimed the whole of the island under a Spanish permit dated August 1, 1781. This "man of the sea" was absolutely without fear.

When he was approached by General Pakenham in 1815 to point the way for the British fleet to reach the rear of New Orleans he refused. Bribes and threats were of no avail. But he rendered invaluable service to General Jackson and received from him a personal letter of thanks after the battle of New Orleans.

Lafitte, "the Corsair of the Gulf." was closely identified with Cat Island, and it is said that many of the spoils were here divided with his brothers in the game. Who can tell but that some of his treasures are still in the bosom of Mother Earth?

A corsair's name to other times linked with one virtue and a thousand crimes. The descendants of Jean Quave claim that unless a certain jug containing $3000 in gold has been found the soil of Cat Island still contains this buried treasure. The old man died suddenly. He did not bury all his wealth in the same spot. His family knew the number of containers, but this one could never be located.

There are two ponds at the east end of the Island in which the water is perfectly fresh. These are known as "Big Ma" and "Little Ma".

Cat Island is probably the best in point of fertility of all the islands of this group. The Spit is a white sand-hill on Cat Island sixty feet in height.

On one occasion a vessel was blown ashore after a fearful hurricane. Seeing some men attempting to dig away the sand in which it was unbedded. He hastily rowed out and proffered his services. These were declined. Strange sounds emanating from the boat aroused his suspicions. Returning to shore he procured help, overpowered the men, and found chained to the floor the captain who had been secured for the purpose of obtaining the cargo of silk. Some of the descendants of this hero have in their possession a framed document one side of which is French the other English, which reads as follows.

An act for the Relief of Jean Quave wheras: It has been represented to this body by petition of sundry citizens of Hancock County, State of Mississippi that Jean Quave of said county was rendered to the State and to society in general great service in detaining John Baker and Martin Hogan (two lines are not decipherable) the last superior court and committed in the Gulf of Mexico within the state boundary was condemned and sentenced to death by said Court and was executed on the 27th day of September, but the latter having made it from jail was not tried.

And wheras it is considered important to the interest of this State that persons should be encouraged in deeds of valor, humanity and patriotism such as this has been represented to have been especially in relation to the atrocious crimes committed

It has been stated to me that a Mr. Dupre, styling himself Major, and acting as he alleges, under a Commission from Reuben Kemper, assuming to be a Colonel in the service of the Florida convention, has at his command, a corps of armed men, chiefly Americans, and that they have committed depredations on the people of Pascagoula. Endeavor to see this man or some of his party, and inform him or them that the powers of the Florida Convention have ceased, and the people of Pascagoula are now under the protection of the American Government and of the laws of the Territory.

Commodore Shaw W. S. N. will furnish you with the proper vessel and crew, and Captain Farragut of the Navy will accompany you. He is familiar with the coast and the inhabitants, and with the Spanish language. You will purchase on the public account, three stands of colors and keep on account of all expense.

The Dupont Home

Nancy Farragut married Louis Gurlie, an architect of New Orleans. This home was built in 1836 and has been known of late years as the Dupont Home and occupied by Isadore Dupont. Work of building the home was done by slaves. Poplar and cypress trees were cut fully a year before the lumber was used. Floors were made of well seasoned cypress and weather boarding was of poplar. The house was of frontier type of architecture. A large hall formed the main and central portion with two rooms on the north, and two on the south side. Front and back galleries were made the length of the building. The walls were plastered as were also the fourteen foot ceilings. At the present time, the arrangement of the house is unchanged with the exception that the ceilings have been lowered. After the death of Louis Gurlie, Madame Gurlie mortgaged the home to Admiral Farragut's wife, Virginia, who held the mortgage for some years as Madame Gurlie was unable to pay. At Virginia's death her son Loyal Farragut fell heir and now that his cousin Eugenie who was a daughter of Elizabeth Farragut Dupont lived in the home. Loyal sent her a maintenance while he lived. At his death the house was left to Eugenie, who later married a navigator by name of McNeil, who was a highly educated Scotchman. At Mrs. McNeil's death, the house was left to Isadore B. Dupont who has reared a family in the home. Since his death Mrs. I. B. Du-

Farraguts Statement, January 4, 1811.

On the 2nd December last I arrived in the bay of Pascagoula. On the 3rd, immediately on going ashore, ten armed men presented themselves and said Majors Hargraves and Dupree wished to see me. I excused myself from going immediately, but promised that I would report to them next day. Accordingly, the 4th of December, I called on them at the house of John B. Nicholet, deceased, and they immediately hoisted the flag of the convention. Next day they seized John B. Bodraus schooner. On the sixth, they seized the schooners of Anthony Krebs and Augustine A. Mulatto. They brought these vessels in front of Nicholet's house and put aboard all the personal property negroes, dry goods, liquors, household furniture, etc., and even the locks and hinges of the doors. On the 10th after appointing one Peter Nicolet Captain and Commandant, the vessels departed under command of Captain Dupree and proceeded to his residence up the Pascagoula River, which is about two miles below the line of demarcation. They said Dupree left with Commandant Nicolet orders to call on the people as far as Bay St. Louis to take the oath of allegiance to the convention. On my way from Pascagoula to New Orleans, near the Pass I fell in with Nichola, James, Havens, and two others, strangers to me, ordering the people to repair to Pascagoula to take the oath. When I left Pascagoula Dec 13, the flag of the convention was flying at the mouth of the river, and the general understanding was that all the settlements from Bayou La Patrie to Bay St. Louis was under the jurisdiction of said Peter Nicola, agent of the Convention. There were no Spanish authorities on the coast.

It is a great pleasure and satisfaction for me to be with you this evening on the occasion of the viewing of the films about the life and career of Bernardo de GALVEZ in Louisiana. In accepting the invitation of the Louisiana Historical Society my address will deal with the Spanish contribution to the cause of the American Revolution.

Ask any American, with the exception of the trained historian, What he knows of the aid given by Spain to the United States in its struggle for independence during the Revolutionary War and the answer will be short and instantaneous = "Nothing". Ask the same question of many students of American History and the answer will be the same.

And yet, the Spanish contribution to the birth of the United States was enormously important.

Z

Let it be recognized frankly that neither France nor Spain entered the struggle for the independence of the American Colonies from pure altruism. Nations have always acted for reasons of state, as they do to this day. But this is not to say that the participation of the two countries did not substantially contribute to the winning of independence.

The story of the contribution of France has often been told. But what of the contribution of Spain? That story has been sadly and inexplicably neglected.

It is the purpose of this short address to reveal or remind to you of that story, as dispassionately and objectively as possible.

Modern research carried out in archives in Spain, France and Washington reveal that the courts of Madrid and Paris had agreed early in the year 1776, upon a plan for giving assistance secretly to the revolting colonies. It was agreed between them that in order to insure the secrecy, since neither Court was to appear as an ally of the insurgents, all monies and supplies should be handled by a third party and appear as open business transactions.

Sympathy for the Americans, when they began open hostilities against the mother country, ran high throughout Spain. At that time, however, Spain was not in a position to make her sympathy openly known. She was engaged in a war with Portugal over possessions in South America that was costing her vast amounts in money and many men and ships. England, the open ally of Portugal, held the dangerous points of Minorca, Mahon and Gibraltar. Her navy was the most powerful on the seas, second in numbers only to the Spanish fleet.

Carlos III was, at this time, diplomatically involved in peace negotiations with Portugal and could ill afford to enter into any alliance that might endanger the successful conclusion of these negotiations. To become openly engaged in the struggle of the American colonists against their mother country would certainly lead to a declaration of war against England and invite an immediate blockade of all Spanish ports, thus ending all possibility of signing the desired treaty with Portugal. Such was the position of Spain when the American began hostilities against England. It also sufficiently explains the reasons why Spain decided to keep secret her aid to the revolting colonies.

It was arranged accordingly that, to start with, the two Bourbon Courts would make an outright gift of two million "livres tournoises," one million to come from each Court. One of the first moves consisted of setting up a fictitious (sic) company to direct the aid program; make purchase of supplies arrange for their shipment to the Colonies, contact American agents living in France and account for the monies spent. Thus, in June 1776, when the American Revolution had just begun, we find both Spain and France acting officially, though under the seal of secrecy, as allies of the English colonies against their mother country. Even before this date, however, supplies had been going out on a haphazard basis through the ports of Spain, France and Holland, as ship captains from America picked up arms and ammunition in personal trading ventures. Moreover, much important trade of this nature had been going on through the Spanish ports in the West Indies. Using these same ports as bases, American captains had been able to prey upon British merchant vessels during the first months of the war.

By September 1777, Spain had already furnished the American insurgents with 1.870.000 livres tournoises, but before long, it became apparent to the court of Madrid that the funds which had been given equally by the two nations were being credited, by the Americans, solely to the Court of France.

Nevertheless, Spain was still maintaining in 1777 the cloak of secrecy over its operations, a secrecy believed to be vital to the security of its American dominion. For this reason when Charles III decided to send Juan Miralles as an observer to the headquarters of General Washington in 1777, Miralles took up his duties under the patronage of the French Ambassador, following the instructions of the Spanish Court. Miralles position was humiliating. He felt, and not without reason, that the affairs of Spain were being adjusted to the indirect advantage of France. But it proved impossible to bring about a change in his status. Washington and Miralles became very close friends. The Spanish diplomat died in Washington's headquarters, at Morristown, on April 1780. The highest military honors were rendered to him as if he had been a fully accredited ambassador. Washington paid his final tribute to his friend in a letter to the Governor of Havana saying of him "in this country he as been universally esteemed and will be universally regretted."

In the fall of 1777, Washington, his army short of clothing and war supplies, was facing the winter that might well decide the fate of his country. Desperate agents of the colonies were becoming more and more indiscreet, announcing openly the sources of aid to America. By giving the strong impression that Spain and France were actually their open allies, they hoped to weaken England's will to continue the war.

Finally, on the 21st of June 1779, Spain declared war against Great Britain.

But before that happened, the hard-pressed Americans were being placed in possession of sorely-needed supplies along the western frontier through the Spanish Governor of Louisiana in New Orleans, Bernardo de GALVEZ. New Orleans was thus to become crucial to the cause of the American revolution. There, the story of the collaboration between Oliver POLLOCK, who was well on his way to becoming one of the greatest financiers in North America, and the young Spanish Governor, Bernardo de GALVEZ, would remain forever a glorious affirmation of the friendship between Spain and the struggling new nation.

It is not my purpose to go into the narrative of the campaigns which followed. I would rather mention very briefly some of its more relevant details.

Fortunately the renewed interest in their own history awakened in Americans by the celebration of the Bicentennial war, has reminded many of the decisive importance of the role played by Bernardo de GALVEZ in the unfolding of the American Revolution. Nevertheless, not many Americans know about the "Marcha de Galvez" and about the fight which took place along the Caribbean (Gulf) coast of the United States or up the Mississippi Valley, in which Americans and Spaniards fought together against the common English foe.

And this is so because there is a tendency to consider the American Revolution as a series of dramatic events taking place in a comparatively small area along the Eastern Seaboard, getting the crucial importance that the Mississippi River Valley and the Northeast Coast of the Gulf of Mexico did actually have in the success of the uprising.

The celebration of the Bicentennial has been an excellent opportunity, to bring back to the arena of the American Revolution the role played by Louisiana and the rest of the territories of North America, which were once under the sovereignty of Spain.

Spain's attitude in the first moments of the Revolution is clearly expressed by Don Bernardo de GALVEZ when he wrote Colonel MORGAN, at the time Commander in Fort Pitt, August 9, 1777. After expressing his support for the Colonists cause, GALVEZ said: "You can count on me extending whatever aid is within my power to give, as long as it appears to be totally ignorant of it." That cautious attitude is totally in line with the secrecy requested for the operation by the Court of Spain, as was mentioned before.

Spain's entry into the War came at a time that was highly critical for the Colonists, who were trying to fight the strongest nation in Europe almost barehanded. In 1778, the center of gravity of the war had been transferred from the North to the South and there the fortunes of war were not exactly favouring the Colonists. That year the English took Savannah and Augusta, as well as other towns, causing severe setbacks for the American forces which had lost some 5.000 men.

It was then that the British hastened to put into action their long contemplated plans for the capture of New Orleans, and there is little doubt that their success would have given them permanent command of the Mississippi Basin, from Canada to the Gulf.

It is very easy to imagine what the consequences of such a situation would have meant to the cause of the American Revolution. With the British already controlling all the Eastern Coast, Canada and Florida, their possession of the Mississippi Valley would have strangled the rebellion to death.

Spain contributed to prevent this from happening by entering the Revolutionary War and providing the Colonists with secure Southern and Western borders, from its bases in Louisiana and Cuba. This was extremely important since it prevented the American Revolutionaries from getting encircled. Supplies could continue to flow up the Mississippi and, from then on, the Colonists would be able to wage their war of Independence with their backs well protected.

The Spanish Commander-in-Chief was Don Bernardo de GALVEZ. In September 1779, he led his forces 115 miles north of New Orleans in eleven days, in what is known as the "Marcha de Galvez," capturing Manchack (Manchac), Baton Rouge and Natchez, British posts on the Mississippi. Then he turned on Mobile, which he conquered by the end of March 1780, leaving only Pensacola, capital of West Florida, that was to be surrendered to him by Brigadier General John CAMPBELL, together with 1.100 prisoners, by the summer of 1781.

Spain's declaration of war on England forced the British to fight on several fronts at the same time, having to oppose the combined Franco-Spanish Fleet of 90 vessels, which was laying siege to Gibraltar, and had even threatened to invade England itself. In this way, they tied-up a sizeable percentage of the British fleet from the Indian Ocean to the Caribbean, making it impossible for England to effect a blockade on the American Coast, and so facilitating the operation of an ever-growing fleet of American and foreign privateers. The activities of Spanish privateers were also an important factor as they helped to cripple English means of communication and transportation. Among those privateers was The Spaniard Jorge Farragut, father of the first American Admiral.*

*Jorge Farragut was the father of D. Farragut, famous for his capture of New Orleans in the Civil War, April 1862.

The intervention of the Spanish forces, under the command of Don Bernardo de GALVEZ was, thus, the beginning of a solid and unbreakable peace and friendship between Spain and the United States of America, to quote the words of the Treaty signed in October, 1795 by the two countries.

By February 1780, the young Spanish Governor of Louisiana, Bernardo de GALVEZ, had successfully accomplished his defeat of the British at the Mississippi Valley and Gulf of Mexico. In a letter of February 27, 1780, addressed to General LINCOLN, WASHINGTON referred to the matter recognizing that "the success of the Spaniards in West Florida are a very important stroke that will have a favorable influence upon our affairs in other quarters."

To end my address, let me mention here a forgotten and little known incident which proved yet again the manifold ways in which vital help was extended by Spain and the Spanish people. The war on American soil was virtually ended by the close of 1781. The battle of Yorktown decided the outcome. In that final and decisive battle, Spain's part was indirect and unique. The Spanish authorities in Havana raised in 24 hours by public subscription 15 million dollars continental to make possible the defeat of CORNWALLIS by WASHINGTON at Yorktown in October 17, 1781, thereby ensuring to the Americans the possession of Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia.

Through this spontaneous action in Havana, Spain took her indirect but important part in the final scene that was to ensure the destiny of the people of the United States.

It was not until July 1794, more than ten years after the close of the war, that the task of computing the total debt to Spain incurred by the United States was completed. The bill amounted to a total of slightly over 2 million dollars, truly an enormous sum for that time. For a nation whose only currency was in paper, that purchasing power may well have meant the difference between victory and defeat.

The purchase by a company of northerners, of the tract of rich ham-acres, on the west side of the West

public eye that locality. On a spot fanned by the invigorating breezes told in an article on Major George Farragut by Marshall Delaney Hay-

in the Gulf States Historical Magastates:

"Sometime during the early part of 1807, Major Farragut removed

Mississippi. It was situated at a slight promontory called Point Plaquet and sometimes known as Farragut's Point. This place is on the west side of Pascagoula River, and near it was a small harbor, together with tremendous stretches of marsh lands which were interspersed with bayous and ponds. The place was in a section of country which, in parlance of the old English borders, might be styled 'debatable land,'
for it was claimed by the Spaniards as a part of West Florida and by the United States as included within the Louisiana Territory, recently pur-

American settlers had captured the Spanish fortress at Baton Rouge the Government at Washington seized the whole stretch of country in dis-

"After the retirement of Sailing-

once more repaired to his plantation remainder of his life.

"It was on his plantation at Point

Farragut died, three years after his retirement from the navy, in the sixty-second year of his age, and after a residence of more than forty years in the republic for whose in-

From books "David Glasgow Farragut", Our First Admiral and "Admiral in the Making" by Prof. Charles Lee Lewis of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. Copyright 1941:

David's father, George Anthony Magin Garragut was born Sept. 29, 1755 at Ciudadella on the island of Minorca of excellent Spanish stock. He died June 4, 1817 on his plantation in west Pascagoula, Mississippi.

His mother was Elizabeth Shine, born June 7, 1765 in Lenoir County, N. C. near Kinston. She died of yellow fever in New Orleans, near Lake Ponchatrain on June 22, 1808, where the family had settled. She had nursed Capt. David Porter's father until his death in 1808, which occurred on the same day she died.

After her death it became necessary at once to provide care for her children, who were very small. They were placed with different families because the father, George Farragut was on duty on Gunboat 13 in New Orleans and couldn't take care of them.

The oldest child, William Augustus Claiborne Farragut had become an active midshipman on the New Orleans station March 14, 1808. After his marriage his children were Glasgow, twins Fineit and Pamalee, who married brothers by the name of Raby and a daughter who married a Flotte.

James Glasgow Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was taken under the wing of Capt. David Porter, who was very grateful to Mrs. Farragut for her kindness in nursing his father. James later changed his name to David, in admiration and love for his guardian Capt. Porter.

Nancy Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was adopted by William Boswell and in 1826 she married Louis Gourlie and lived in Pascagoula, Mississippi, until her death on June 6th, 1883. She lived in a house picturesquely situated on the river and was known as a very gracious hostess.

Elizabeth was placed in the care of a Mrs. Dupont near Pascagoula. She married Celestin Dupont and had four children: Eugenie, Zulme, Isadore and Louis. Mrs. Dupont apparently died before the Civil War.

Both sons and husbands of the daughters were in the Confederate Service.

George Antoine Farragut, the youngest child, died at the age of ten by drowning in the vicinity of New Orleans.

The Farraguts started life in a log cabin in Tennessee and went to New Orleans where the father, George, ran a ferry. They went to New Orleans on a flatboat, which took weeks and settled near Lake Ponchatrain. This was in 1807 and shortly thereafter George, the father, bought a plantation of 900 acres in West Pascagoula on the Pascagoula River where it flowed into Mississippi Sound. It was named Point Plaquet, later Farragut's Point.

Norfolk, Va
Sept. 25, 1835

Dear Sir:

Your note has been received & it would give me great pleasure to comply with your request if it was in my power, but, I really know so little of my Father's history that it would scarcely aid you in your object, I only remember my Father as a farmer in Tennessee or a soldier. I suppose He was a militia Dragoon, because altho only 5 years old, I remember.....only his Dragoon coat with white horse ... on the crest (?)

You may think it strange that I remember that fact so I'll say on one occasion...our house was surrounded by some stragglng Indians....They never discovered as they were at a distance.....my mother put the children in the loft of the log kitchen that stood a short distance from the house and when the Indians approached she held a parley ? with them (underlined) from the house, no doubt to detain them..... from the kitchen. We lay there all breathless until released by our mother. During the parley (?) she was once induced to come down to the door which was secured by a strong bar & chain to give them some whiskey as they said they would go away if she would give them some but as she attempted to open the door a little, one of them struck at her with a knife but she closed the door by the bar....and his knife stuck in the door. They soon after went away and we were released from our confinement. My father returned home in an hour after their departure, then it was I saw for the first time the real passion of man get possession of him..... He could scarcely be persuaded by my mother from the folly of following him by himself but she at length prevailed upon him to put on his uniform and collect his company as there was too many of the Indians to be mastered by less than a dozen whites which she said he could collect.

My Father accordingly set off on horse back in his (as I thought - elegant) uniform - and at about two hours had again passed the house with 10 horsemen similarly (?) draped - they were soon put on the trail by my mother and away they went in pursuit of the Indians - what became of the Indians I don't know.

I remember the impression.....left on my mind that lasted is that they did not have many of them (left) to account of their visit to our lovely dwelling which is well as I remember & from conversation...with Gen'l Jackson & Judge Anderson the Comptroller.... must have been on the Holston River at Campbell Station.....

....infrequented ... Father's house.....next to him but did not know from which State...that he believed he was appointed in North Carolina. I know he was appointed Major by his old associates ... then difficulty occurred or when.... taken... Jefferson Gunboat system was put in operation my father who appeared to have been something of a waterman....and my elder brother was appointed to the command of one... No. 11 and (?) had obtained a midshipman's warrant and a schooner with the rank (?) of Masters... mounting four head (?) of guns, he was ordered immediately into service & my mother was left to move the family down to New Orleans.

The next call by the direction of my father - a keel boat was built for us and our family floated down the river in it, under the charge of a young man from Kentucky by the name of Merrill Brady. The next season in New Orleans was something like the present - a most deadly yellow fever season and my mother fell a victim to it.

The children of whom were five, were placed by my Father in different families to be brought up ... It so happened that a..... Commander Porter's Father was in the same duty in New Orleans as my Father. He was in wretched (?) health until my father took him to his house & my mother nursed him as long as health permitted her..... but it pleased the order of all things to take them both out of the world at the same time, one by consumption, the other by yellow fever and they were both interred on the same day (so I have been told).

I was with the rest of the children removed from home and knew nothing of the sickness of my mother until she had already been dead some time. Some time shortly after Comdr Porter arrived to take command of the station & learning the particulars of his mother's death, insisted upon taking one of my Father's children to bring up. He had just married and had no children. My Father consented provided he could induce either of us to go with him, which by degrees my sister & myself lived with the Commander in New Orleans as long as he retained the Station & when he was relieved I embarked with him and my sister remained with him and his sister who had married Dr. Hess, the Navy Surgeon of the Station.

From that time to the day of his death Comdr Porter was a father to me and I never saw my own father again. I was seven years old when I left home so you see how little I would know of his life and character, in fact, all that I know I gathered from others. About 25 years ago while in Norfolk where I generally reside I received a message that there was a gentleman at the Hotel who wished to see me. I went down and an elderly gentleman who introduced himself as the old and early friend of my father's and wished to see if I was a sprig worthy of the parent stock. It was Col. McKee, then a member of Congress from Alabama. He informed me that a Mr. Ogden and himself and my father were the 3 first settlers of Tennessee. They lived in a log cabin for some time. I don't remember ... long.....heard that he would.....Collier (?)....my father going to Caladella (?).... in the Colony of Minorca (?), I am under the impression that my Grandfather (underlined) was from Caladella (?) and not the father but I may be wrong.)

He spoke of him as a man of great wrecklessness (?) of character and & just suited for the life of a pioneer. I replied that he had paid the forfeit of his wreckless life and that he had died of a cough..... contracted in that way (?) when only 61 years of age at Pascagoula in Mississippi. He had purchased a tract of land, located the family there. It was his habit to cross Lake Ponchartrain in a small boat & sleep on the beach when night overtook him. I will remember him wrapping we children up upon the boatsails.... of these trips only a short time before I left him..... said McKee, that was just like him, he was just as much at home on the water as on the sand. He was a glorious Indian..... & a great pioneer (?)... & a provider in great straights... for food (?). I did not think to ask Col. McRee.... give me a little picture of what he knew of my father's life.....

I have never been able to find any record of his service in the Army, tho Gen'l Jackson & Judge Anderson informed me that his application.... the Navy was for his service on the.....was & the Judge told me he.... a Major at the same time he was name & was a..... good while..... uncle to my brother who resides in New Orleans & perhaps... he may....

I left New Orleans with Cdr' Porter in 1809 and did not return there until 1828 & then made myself.... a..... of 5 or ten days. A.....a..... of 2 weeks in 1838 so you see, Sir, how little I know of my Father or even my family. I think he was born in 1755 & died at his residence near Pascagoula in 1815 in his 61st year. He was in the Battle of New Orleans but what part he bore I know not. I only know that if he had not borne an honorable part Gen'l Jackson would not have acknowledged him as a friend (?)... have been ... to befriend his son as she (?)... did. This Sir, I have endeavored to give you all the little I know of my Father and in doing so I have been compelled to give you a little of my own (?) early history & from that date up to the present the Archives of the Navy Dept. contains my history which is but little more than a histories (?) of ... on the stations in different parts of the world. I have several (as the sailor says Red Rovers (?)) in the seven Bloody Wars besides many others that have..... the Navy.

Your Obd't Servant

Local interest revived in Farragut legend

■ Historical commission wants to replace sign

By MOODY CONNELL
Mississippi Press Staff

GAUTIER — Memories of Adm. David Glasgow Farragut are stirring again now that the Gautier Historic Preservation Commission has shown interest in erecting a memorial sign along U.S. 90.

In 1954, a historical marker was placed along U.S. 90 west of Gautier to recognize the area as the boyhood home of Civil War-hero Farragut, and his father, George, a soldier in the American Revolution.

That sign, according to state historian Jim Woodrick, was lost during high winds from a storm, although the exact date is unknown. The cost of erecting a new monument would be the responsibility of the city, Woodrick said.

"There are no state funds for markers now. We can provide Gautier the marker, but it will cost $1,500," he said.

Interest in the marker has recently been renewed.

The area where George Farragut raised his family — shaded, rolling hills that stretched from Farragut lake to what is now Martin Bluff Road and into Vancleave — has become part of the city of Gautier through the recent annexation.

The property is part of a 900-acre Spanish land grant awarded to George Farragut. George Farragut joined U.S. Navy

Capt. David Porter to support Gen. Andrew Jackson at the Battle of New Orleans in 1814, a stunning victory for the young American nation over British forces.

Farragut's son would also go on to glory more than 80 years later.

James Farragut was taken in by Porter and given the opportunity to live a life at sea. The young boy changed his name to David in honor of his new benefactor.

During the Civil War, David Farragut was assigned to roam the Gulf of Mexico from Florida to Texas as part of a blockade. Many Pascagoula vessels bearing turpentine, cotton and other goods became prizes of the Union blockades.

In 1862, Farragut was ordered to take New Orleans for the Union, and after using Ship Island as a base, he stormed up the Mississippi, past the city's defenses and secured the South's largest port.

Farragut helped maintain the Union blockading strategy in the Gulf and also supported Union army movements along the Mississippi River until 1864.

It is said that in 1864, Farragut, aboard his flagship, USS Hartford, fired the ship's big guns in Pascagoula's waters, forcing Martin Freeman to abandon his fishing vessel. Freeman would join Farragut and his armada in a raid on Mobile Bay later that year.

Pushing forward against the Confederate ironclad CSS Tennessee, as well as stationary mines known then as torpedoes and the guns of Forts Gaines and Morgan, Farragut pressed on for a decisive Union victory with Freeman as his ship's pilot.

Farragut, as the commander of Union forces engaging Mobile, had to climb above the smoke of battle high in his gunboat's maintop, holding on to Freeman's foot to signal him as Confederate shells and bullets whistled around them. Here, it has been reported, Farragut made the order to "damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!"

Freeman, the operator of a fishing fleet out of New Orleans who had managed to stay neutral until his encounter with the Union admiral, was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery.

George Farragut died at Point Plaquet in West Pascagoula, although his actual burial site is unknown. In 1870, David Glasgow Farragut died, and was buried in New York.

A large bronze statue was raised in Farragut Square in Washington, D.C., while another was erected in Madison Square in New York City.

It will be up to the Gautier Historic Preservation Commission and the city to decide if a memorial should be restored to recognize his boyhood home in Mississippi.

Farragut descendant to take part in re-creation

MOSS POINT — A Civil War re-enactment will carry on a family tradition May 3 when Richard Farragut of Pascagoula visits Mobile to take part in a re-creation of the Battle of Mobile Bay.

A descendant of Adm. David Farragut, who led the Union forces against Confederate defenders in the historic battle for control of the South's last remaining port, Richard will join others who storm the Mobile harbor in "Thunder on the Bay 2002."

Richard is the son of James Farragut Sr., a World War II veteran who kept the Farragut naval tradition alive, rescuing a sailor from danger near the Marshall Islands.

Richard and his father work in real estate from offices on Old Mobile Highway. James Farragut Jr., an attorney, shares the offices, which are adorned with memorabilia of family history, including paintings depicting the Battle of Mobile Bay.

These Farraguts are the descendants of Adm. Farragut's older brother, William J. Farragut, who was born in 1797.

Two sisters, Nancy and Elizabeth, also lived in Jackson County during the 19th-century, and David Farragut — the first U.S. Navy officer to attain the rank of Adm. — often slipped through enemy lines to see his family in Mississippi.

James Farragut Sr. recalls fondly the family tradition. When the time came for him to serve his country, he joined the U.S. Navy, like his brother before him.

"There are no state funds for markers now. We can provide Gautier the marker, but it will cost $1,500," he said.

Interest in the marker has recently been renewed.

From books "David Glasgow Farragut", Our First Admiral and "Admiral in the Making" by Prof. Charles Lee Lewis of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. Copyright 1941:

David's father, George Anthony Magin Garragut was born Sept. 29, 1755 at Ciudadella on the island of Minorca of excellent Spanish stock. He died June 4, 1817 on his plantation in West Pascagoula, Mississippi.

His mother was Elizabeth Shine, born June 7, 1765 in Lenoir County, N. C. near Kinston. She died of yellow fever in New Orleans, near Lake Ponchartrain on June 22, 1808, where the family had settled. She had nursed Capt. David Porter's father until his death in 1808, which occurred on the same day she died.

After her death it became necessary at once to provide care for her children, who were very small. They were placed with different families because the father, George Farragut was on duty on Gunboat 13 in New Orleans and couldn't take care of them.

The oldest child, William Augustus Claiborne Farragut had become an active midshipman on the New Orleans station March 1, 1808. After his marriage his children were Glasgow, twins Fineit and Pamalee, who married brothers by the name of Raby and a daughter who married a Flotte.

James Glasgow Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was taken under the wing of Capt. David Porter, who was very grateful to Mrs. Farragut for her kindness in nursing his father. James later changed his name to David, in admiration and love for his guardian Capt. Porter.

Nancy Farragut, born Jan. 20, 1804 was adopted by William Boswell and in 1826 she married Louis Gourlie and lived in West Pascagoula, Mississippi, until her death on June 6th, 1883. She lived in a house picturesquely situated on the river and was known as a very gracious hostess.

Elizabeth was placed in the care of a Mrs. Dupont near Pascagoula. She married Celestin Dupont and had four children: Eugenie, Zulme, Isadore and Louis. Mrs. Dupont apparently died before the Civil War.

Both sons and husbands of the daughters were in the Confederate Service.

George Antoine Farragut, the youngest child, died at the age of ten by drowning in the vicinity of New Orleans.

The Farraguts started life in a log cabin in Tennessee and the father, George, ran a ferry. They went to New Orleans on a flatboat, which took weeks and settled near Lake Ponchartrain. This was in 1807 and shortly thereafter George, the father, bought a plantation of 900 acres in West Pascagoula on the Mississippi River where it flowed into Mississippi Sound. It was named Point Plaquet, later Farragut's Point.

GRAND ECORE IS FARRAGUT HOME ON PASCAGOULA

-- by Clayton Rand

One day last July, 1926, I ate breakfast at the famous Farragut Inn at Portsmouth, New Hampshire. One day, last July, I stood in Madison Square, New York, and marveled at another masterpiece wrought from the hands of St. Gaudens, who made live in statuary something of the virility of America's most distinguished Admiral. One day, last week, I stood beneath the branches of magnificent magnolias that crown the crest of hills overlooking the Singing Pascagoula, and felt something of the presence of this fighting genius at the scene of his ancestral home at Grande Ecore.

About three miles north of the Old Spanish Trail, on the east (?) bank of the Pascagoula and Lake Farragut, one finds Grande Ecore, meaning in the Spanish, "Grand View", and so recited in the grant tendered ~~the~~ father of Admiral Farragut by the King of Spain in the first months of the last century.

Either while visiting relatives in Tennessee or during military service to his country in 1801 (MJS note: yes) a son was born and named David Glascoe Farragut, and this boy was brought back to Grande Ecore, where from the high hills that over-look the lake and the winding Pascagoula, even out to the waters of the Mississippi Sound, he felt the irresistible call to the sea. The world that he knew extended no farther than Pascagouls, where his father in his last days served as magistrate.

Left an orphan at the age of seven, this Admiral, who served later with distinction through three wars, was adopted by Captain David Porter, god-father and friend of the family. Captain Porter received a commission for the lad in the Navy, and, at the early age of eleven, he saw active service on the high seas in several engagements in the War of 1812.

The part that he played in sacking New Orleans and Natchez during the Civil War are history, and but incidents in a service to his country extending over sixty years, all but twelve of which were spent on the Seven Seas.

The purchase by a company of northerners of the tract of rich hammock land consisting of about 600 acres on the west side of the West River known as the old Farragut Tract has again brought before the public eye that locality. On a spot fanned by the invigorating breezes from the Gulf, and protected from storms by stately trees, once stood the plantation home place occupied by two possessors of a name famous in history.

Major George Farragut article by Marshall Delancy Haywood of North Carolina, published in the Gulf States Historical Magazine in September 1903 states:

"Sometime during the early part of 1807, Major Farragut removed with his family from Tennessee to the Gulf Coast, having received a commission as Sailing Master in the United States Navy on the 2nd of March in that year. At the time of his appointment he was still a resident of Tennessee.

"After his arrival in the Far South Farragut purchased a plantation in what is now Jackson County, Miss. It was situated at a slight promontory called Point Plaquet and sometimes known as Farragut's Point. This place is on the west side of Pascagoula River and near it was a small harbor together with tremendous stretches of marsh lands which were interspersed with bayous and ponds.

"The place was in a section of country which, in variance of the old English Borders, might be styled 'debatable land,' for it was claimed by the Spaniards as a part of West Florida and by the United States as included within the Louisiana Territory, recently purchased from France. After the American settlers had captured the Spanish fortress at Baton Rouge the Government at Washington seized the whole stretch of country in dispute.

"After the retirement of Sailing Master Farragut from the Navy, he once more repaired to his plantation in Mississippi and there spent the remainder of his life.

"It was on his plantation at Point Plaquet, June 4, 1817, that George Farragut died, three years after his retirement from the Navy, in the sixty-second year of his age, and after a residence of more than forty years in the republic for whose independence he had bravely contended when a young Captain of North Carolina Light Horse in the Army of the Revolution.

"He was of Spanish descent and a native of the Island of Minorca, one of the Balearic group, in the Mediterranean Sea, which at the time of George Farragut's birth September 29, 1755, was captured from the English by the French, Farragut leaving the island for America in 1772."

Dear Ms. Rodgers:

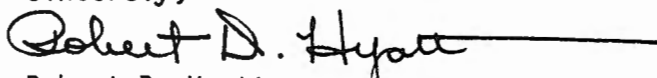

I have received your letter regarding the tomb of George Farragut. In August 1974 Marc Rucker, archaeologist with the Highway Department at that time, conducted a cultural resources survey of the proposed rest area on Interstate Highway 10 near Lake Farragut. He did not find any evidence of a cemetery in this area at that time. In October 1981 we rechecked this area for evidence of archaeological or historic sites during the construction of the rest area. Most of the dirt moving had been completed at that time and we did not note any evidence of a cemetery.

I have contacted Alton Arrington, resident engineer with the Highway Department in Escatawpa. He says that they did not detect the presence of burials or tombs during construction of the rest area. However, he has agreed to cooperate with you in your effort to determine if the cemetery is located within the highway right of way. His address is:

Mr. Alton Arrington, Resident Engineer

WHEN ADMIRAL FARRAGUT CAPTURED PASCAGOULA

This is a fascinating Civil War story you won't find in the formal histories of the Coast — about that August night in 1864 when Admiral David Farragut of the Union Navy, in his own Flagship HARTFORD, captured his beloved boyhood home town of Pascagoula, came ashore to see his sister and spent the next day visiting with childhood playmates — and then proceeded with his fleet to fight and win the Battle of Mobile Bay that sealed off the Confederacy's last seaport.

It was not braggadocio, a desire on the part of grown up Davy Farragut to flaunt his brass and his big guns before the eyes of his boyhood pals. Admiral Farragut was too big a man for a petty show like that. It was not because Pascagoula represented any strategic military objective — on the contrary its capture had not the slightest bearing on the fleet's battle plans. Nor was it because Davy Farragut took time out from his country's business to make a family call on his sister. No, Farragut was too busy and too conscious of his burden of duty to throw away a day for personal reasons.

You won't believe this — but he captured Pascagoula for one man he knew was there — a man whose importance you'll understand when you've finished this.

KNOW YOUR COAST got the story from the precious notes of Walter Lewis, former editor of the Pascagoula Chronicle-Star who died in 1946 and who had heard and recorded the tale as it was told by the oldtimers.

On the night referred to the Flagship HARTFORD left the Federal fleet in the Gulf and came silently around the bend of Point aux Chene on Pascagoula Bay and anchored in the darkness off the mouth of Bayou Rosa.

As soon as it was stationary Admiral Farragut came on deck and ordered five guns fired in the night in this order: Bam-bam, bam, bam-bam. Although the ship's officers must have thought he was demented, the guns were fired without question in the staggered order as directed.

All was very quiet for about forty-five minutes and then suddenly the darkness was filled with the staccato rattle of small arms. An officer rushed to the Admiral's cabin. "We are being attacked, sir!" he reported incredulously. "Attacked by whom? calmly inquired Farragut. The officer grinned and said, "It looks like mosquitoes, sir. They have shot the flag away and are now shooting at our water line." Still smiling, the Admiral inquired: "Any casualties?" "No sir," the officer continued, "they do not seem to be shooting at our men or our decks."

Completely satisfied with the explanation Farragut issued his orders. "Lower boats and look for a fishing boat with an Indian symbol painted on its bow and bring Martin Freeman to me. Don't shoot at them, they won't shoot at you."

In a few minutes the officer returned with a stocky fisherman and was told to leave the cabin. "Well, Martin, you got my signal. I see," grinned the Admiral when they were alone.

"Yes — I was with the fishing boats around the point of Petit Bois when we got what the boys thought was an invitation for a fight. You know some of them have gone ashore for more shot-guns to take over this gunboat before morning." A humorous twin-tracked him to his lair deep in the silent woods and in two or three years sufficed to build up a colony of thirty or forty souls.

The fort, or block house, which was erected was not a pretentious affair but it was well-constructed of a double thickness of logs with portholes from which effective work could be accomplished with light ordinance of the day. At times during the earlier days of the settlement entire families would retire at night in the block house which was kept stored with ample provisions to sustain the inhabitants through an ordinary siege.

Luckily they were never attacked by the Indians and the little village rapidly grew to be an important trading post with more business than Knoxville for a few years. Stores were established and pretentious houses erected, some of which are yet standing in the last stages of decay.

There were a tavern, a tannery, a wagon shop, cabinet factory, and the other industries appealing to the patronage of the surrounding country. All these save the tannery have long since gone the way of all things earthly. There are yet one or two stores, the post office, and the smithy, but it must have been many a day since a roof was reshingled or a house repainted or a nail driven in the ancient village.

The location of the old fort is still pointed out to visitors just south of the main road on a small elevation above the banks of Turkey creek. It was preserved as long as possible. The last stick of it had disappeared full forty years ago. Surrounding the village are the fertile and well-cultivated farms of the Campbells, Nelsons, Russells, Praters, and others.

One of the most noted citizens of Campbell Station in the olden time was Capt. James Bell, who owned many acres of fertile lands in the neighborhood, and who was a prince among good men in all respects. He, too, kept an inn on the western outskirts of the village, close by the highway, and it was one of the most famous hostelrys in the country. He entertained in the regal style of the old regime and was known from Washington to New Orleans for his generous hospitality. He built the old Bell house at State and Main streets in Knoxville which was for years the leading hotel in the city.

Among others of the early pioneers of Campbell Station were the Russells and Martins, families that were and are still prominent throughout Tennessee. "Uncle Johnny" Campbell, a son of David Campbell, is still living near the Station and is nearing his ninetieth year.

Chapter XII

Birthplace of Admiral Farragut - Battle of Campbell's Station

In all the written histories of Admiral Farragut, U.S.N., it is stated that he was born at Campbell Station and there has always been a great deal of speculation as to the exact spot upon which the parents resided when the naval hero came into the world.

The plain truth is that Admiral Farragut was not born in nor quite near the village of Campbell Station, but at the time Campbell Station was the only post office or town within many miles and biographers have been almost compelled to give the little village credit for what afterwards proved to be a notable event.

After diligent research the writer is able to positively locate the spot and possibly the first thing that attracted the attention of the infant Farragut when his eyes were fairly opened were the still blue waters of the Tennessee river. On a bluff near Lowe's ferry, one and a half miles southeast of Concord, and three miles from Campbell Station, George Farragut built a log cabin in 1793 or 1794, and here on the 5th day of July, 1800, David Glasgow, the admiral, was born.

George Farragut, David's father, served through the Revolutionary war with distinction. At the close of the war he was placed in command of the military district of Washington which embraced the Carolinas, and a part of the great southwest territory. While thus engaged he married Elizabeth Shine, of North Carolina, and settled temporarily on the banks of the Tennessee near Campbell Station, on the Indian frontier.

Mrs. Farragut was a woman of unusual courage and on one occasion defended her house single-handed against a roving band of Indians who threatened to burn the house and murder the family. With her own rifle she put them to flight.

About 1807 the Farraguts removed to Louisiana, settling near New Orleans.

In the life of Admiral David Farragut we have the true embodiment of the American, the fearless soldier, the invincible, indomitable leader of men.

The ancient village of Campbell Station was the scene of quite a respectable battle a few days previous to the battle of Fort Saunders and the raising of the siege of Knoxville in November, 1863. On or about October 25 General Burnside was informed that the Confederate forces under command of General Longstreet had departed from Chattanooga with the purpose of capturing Knoxville and occupying the East Tennessee valley. He thereupon took steps to intercept the invading army at the Tennessee river and an army of ten thousand men was sent out for that purpose.

One division was hurried to Kingston, another was Stationed at Maryville and Rockford, while the main body of troops occupied the heights at Loudon and guarded the ferry near Lenoirs. General Longstreet remained in the neighborhood of Chattanooga until November 4, when with 20,000 men he commenced his march towards Knoxville. At Sweetwater General Wheeler with his division was detached and ordered to Maryville, where on the 13th they defeated the Union forces in a sharp skirmish.

McLaws' division came up by way of Kingston and General Hood with his division including two battalions of artillery marched straight on toward Loudon. On the morning of the 13th, it having been determined to hold Knoxville at all hazards, General Burnside ordered the evacuation of Loudon. He struck camp on the morning of the 15th and marched to Lenoirs, where the night was spent and where two days' rations were issued.

In the meantime McLaws' division of Longstreet's army was marching up the Kingston road toward Knoxville. A short distance west of Campbell Station the main road from Loudon intersects the Kingston road and therefore the ancient village became a strategic point. Burnside desired to reach the intersection of the two roads ahead of McLaw, and in order to do the same, Hartranft's division and Biddle's cavalry were on the march before daylight the 16th.

The roads were a sea of mud and rapid marching was quite out of the question, so it was near 12 o'clock when they reached the goal. The Confederate forces were so close upon them that they scarcely had time to get in position for battle. In a short time Burnside's main army came up and was formed in line. White's division and five batteries of six guns each occupied the center; Hartranft's division the extreme right, and Ferrero's division made the left wing.

The Federal forces were no sooner prepared for battle than General Longstreet came up with Hood's division temporarily in command of General Jenkins. The Confederate forces were soon placed in position with Jenkins on the left, McLaws's on

-- by Clayton Rand

One day last July, 1926, I ate breakfast at the famous Farragut Inn at Portsmouth, New Hampshire. One day, last July, I stood in Madison Square, New York, and marveled at another masterpiece wrought from the hands of St. Gaudens, who made live in statuary something of the virility of America's most distinguished Admiral. One day, last week, I stood beneath the branches of magnificent magnolias that crown the crest of hills overlooking the Singing Pascagoula, and felt something of the presence of this fighting genius at the scene of his ancestral home at Grande Ecore.

About three miles north of the Old Spanish Trail, on the east (?) bank of the Pascagoula and Lake Farragut, one finds Grande Ecore, meaning in the Spanish, "Grand View", and so recited in the grant tendered the father of Admiral Farragut by the King of Spain in the first months of the last century.

Either while visiting relatives in Tennessee or during military service to his country in 1801 (MJS note: yes) a son was born and named David Glascoe Farragut, and this boy was brought back to Grande Ecore, where from the high hills that over-look the lake and the winding Pascagoula, even out to the waters of the Mississippi Sound, he felt the irresistible call to the sea. The world that he knew extended no farther than Pascagouls, where his father in his last days served as magistrate.

Left an orphan at the age of seven, this Admiral, who served later with distinction through three wars, was adopted by Captain David Porter, god-father and friend of the family. Captain Porter received a commission for the lad in the Navy, and, at the early age of eleven, he saw active service on the high seas in several engagements in the War of 1812.

The part that he played in sacking New Orleans and Natchez during the Civil War are history, and but incidents in a service to his country extending over sixty years, all but twelve of which were spent on the Seven Seas.

"I inform you that the 21st of the present I received a letter from Señor Lafon Captain of the French corsair, he assured me that the English captain of the corsair should come to attack again. (Until the death defending but I do not have sufficient troops to combat): whose letter I have in my possession; evidently that the Captain of the Enemy corsair: having captured a schooner (among the three that he captured): had 4 pedreros and I am well informed that the master Leandro with eight men abandoned the referred Schooner in the power of the Enemy without defending it. It is known that if the Captain and Commander of the ship the Favorita had not retaken the said ships, the enemy would have done damage to more than four.

However, Never should such men have arms to deliver to the Enemy in this manner, against us, it is very perjudicial to the Royal Service and to the state."

"I have just learned on the 21st from Mr. Vicente Fernández Tejeiro, Captain and Commander of the La Favorita of having captured three which the Captain of the enemy corsairs had captured on the 19th of the present, as I wrote you on the 23rd of the same

went away from here without my knowledge the two men of the English nation Meger Faragoud and Jion Grim in a large canoe belonging to the Sindic [Alderman] Mr. Santiago Wete, to reconnoiter Horn Island where the enemy corsairs are still, and as we are presently in a critical time, I can do not less than have suspicions of these developments for which I say: the penalty of those cited to your justice."

GEORGE FARRAGUT, FATHER OF ADMIRAL

DAVID G. FARRAGUT, LIVED IN

PASCAGOULA AREA 1810 to 1817

DYING THERE AT POINT PLAQUET,

WEST PASCAGOULA, MISS.

June 4, 1817

... was David G. Farragut, a poor boy whom Commodore David Porter, Sr., had picked up at the Naval Station in New Orleans, and whose intelligence, activity and spirit had engaged the attention and admiration of the officers of the station.

The love of the sea and the longing for naval life had been inspired in young Farragut, and in an elder brother (William A. C. Farragut), by their juvenile associations and observations on the Gulf Coast, where their boyhood was passed. Their father, born, we believe of Catalan or Minorcan descent, had wandered to East Tennessee, where he married, and then returned to the Gulf Coast and settled at West Pascagoula. This was early in the present century.

He here engaged in the lumber and transportation trade. The old saw-mill and other property, once owned by him, now belong to a sister of the late Admiral, and the remains of the father and other members of the family repose in the old graveyard near the mill.

Frequent trips to New Orleans with loads of lumber, in which the elder George Farragut was usually accompanied by his boys, brought the young Farraguts into acquaintance with Commodore Porter, Sr., who was then engaged in refitting vessels for the Naval service at the New Orleans Station.

The strong passion and great aptitude for Naval service of the two boys attracted the friendly notice of Commodore Porter. He took them on several voyages with him, and discovering their merits finally obtained a Midshipman's commission for David. The elder brother, William, about the same time, was commissioned at the solicitation of Louisiana Governor Wm. C. C. Claiborne.

WILLIAM A. C. FARRAGUT SERVED
AS MIDSHIPMAN WITH LIEUT. T.
AP CATESBY JONES IN FIGHT WITH
BRITISH

December 14, 1814

. . . (William A. C. Farragut, Midshipman U. S. Navy, and brother of David Glasgow Farragut) participated in the gallant resistance of the gunboats under Commodore T. Ap Catesby Jones, on Lake Borgne, in December, 1814.

The exposure on this occasion, and in the operations of Commodore Patterson against Lafitte's Baratarians brought on a severe attack of rheumatism, which disabled him for active service ever afterward. Bent nearly double and crippled by his malady, he lived for many years with his family on Rampart Street (New Orleans, La.), retaining the commission of Lieutenant in the Navy, but rarely able to perform any duty.

During the Mexican War his name was dropped from the Naval list, under erroneous representations, but through the active efforts in his behalf of the Hon. Emile LaSere, then Member of Congress from Louisiana, he was restored and died a few years after in the service. . . .

GOVERNOR HOLMES TO GEORGE FARRAGUT

[SD:Exec. Procs. Miss. Terr.]

TOWN OF WASHINGTON, 11th August, 1813.

SIR, I transmit to you a commission as a Justice of the peace for the County of Jackson ¹³ which I request you to accept.

I am &c,

DAVID HOLMES.

[Note on the manuscript] Similar letters accompanied commissions of Justice of the peace sent at the same time to Benjamin Lanier of Jackson, and Thomas Shields of Hancock.

EDWARD TIFFIN TO THE PRESIDENT

[GLO:Div. C, Misc. Letter Book 5]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

General Land office, August 17th 1813.

SIR, Yesterday I received from the Register of the Land office at Fort St. Stephens in the Mississippi Territory, the enclosed letter,¹⁴ which I am under the necessity of troubling you with, having no authority to direct a removal of the public records or property, from the place designated by law.

Mr Samuel Smith, the receiver of public monies at that place, is now here; from him I learn, that Fort St. Stephens is situated in the midst of the best settlements in that country, a hardy race, suited by nature and habits for Indian warfare—and that he knows of no more secure place, provided that in case of the danger Mr Sewall apprehends taking place, there were a company or two of men stationed there, who could throw up such additional works to the old fort, as would afford complete security against any force the enemy might be supposed capable of directing against it. If the war department can not spare such a force for the protection of that place, I should suppose governor Holmes might be instructed to have an eye to the public offices, records, &c^a in exposed places, and provide aid from the militia, in cases of emergency, which it is hoped will not often call for relief or protection.

With every sentiment of the most respectful regard, and sincere wishes for your speedy restoration to health, I have the honor, &c^a

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

¹³ Created by an act of the Legislature, Dec. 14, 1812. The portions of this act which describe the boundaries of Jackson and Hancock counties, created on the same date, are reprinted in Rowland (ed.), Cyclop. Miss., 1, 835, 956.

¹⁴ July 5, 1813, not found; answered Aug. 16, 1813, GLO (Div. C, Misc. Let. Bk. 5).

Drawing depicts Civil War Pascagoula

'Yankee' Admiral Farragut from Dixie

By RALPH POORE
Press Register Reporter

As Admiral David G. Farragut entered Mobile Bay 115 years ago last month and shouted "Damn the torpedoes! Capt. Drayton, go ahead! Jovett, full speed!" his sister waited in her home 45 miles away in Pascagoula, Miss.

Called a traitor by some Confederates, Farragut was a Southerner and like a number of other Southerners who could not bring themselves to forsake the American flag, fought for the Union during the Civil War.

When he was a child the admiral lived for a time in Pascagoula with his father. Other members of the Farragut family still live along the Mississippi coast.

James L. Farragut, Sr., who in researching his family's history, believes the admiral was his great, great uncle, said "We're all Southerners. We don't think of him as a traitor."

Farragut, of Moss Point, Miss., said he had heard that the admiral had cried with his sister over the breakup of the Union and his decision to fight with the northern navy.

"I know he had a hard time deciding to fight for the north," he said. "The Farragut family is proud of his achievements," the Moss Point native said.

The Farragut family has much to be proud of as it is one of the most illustrious in American and European history. The feisty command of the Civil War admiral as he steamed past the roaring cannon of Fort Morgan and the torpedoes which had just sent the Union ironclad Tecumseh to the bottom of the bay is indicative of the Farragut character.

The family is an old one of Spanish heritage. Members had distinguished themselves in service to Spain in the army, government and the church.

Admiral Farragut's courage in battle probably came as a result of his adventures with his father. The admiral's father, George Farragut, 1755-1817, a native of Ciudadela, an island of Minorca, went to sea at age 10. In 1775 he had put into port at New Orleans and upon hearing of the conflict between England and the American colonies, resolved to devote his life and fortune to the independence of America.

He then took his ship to Port-au-Prince and exchanged the cargo for cannon, arms and ammunition for the colonies. Farragut arrived with the cargo in Charleston, S.C. in 1776. In 1778 he was appointed a first lieutenant in the South Carolina navy and in 1779 assisted in the defeat of Savannah, Ga.

At the siege of Charleston in 1780 George Farragut was taken prisoner but later exchanged. He put back to sea but had his right arm badly shattered by a musket ball while fighting on a privateer.

He gave up sea service but volunteered for the militia and fought heroically in various battles during the American Revolution.

At the battle of Cowpens he is reported to have saved the life of Gen. George Washington.

After the Revolution George Farragut became a mariner for awhile until he took up residence in Knoxville, Tenn. It was in Knoxville that David Farragut was born.

President Thomas Jefferson made George Farragut a sailing master in the navy and in 1807 he took command of a navy gunboat at New Orleans. In 1811 he was ordered to the Bay of Pascagoula near where he had a large plantation.

According to James Farragut, his ancestor had been given a large Spanish land grant which included the areas around Vancleave, St. Martin and Gautier.

The Moss Point businessman said that many members of the Farragut family still live in the area and that at one time a number of Farraguts had moved to Mobile, ironically living in the city their ancestor had conquered.

In 1813-14 George Farragut accompanied his friend Gen. Andrew Jackson during his Indian campaigns. The old mariner's last action was at the battle of New Orleans in 1814.

The young David Farragut often accompanied his father on his hazardous exploits.

After his mother died of yellow fever, according to James Farragut, David Farragut was reared by a family friend, Commodore David Porter. In 1810, at the age of nine, Farragut received a midshipman appointment.

The nation's future first admiral distinguished himself in several hazardous encounters during the War of 1812 and afterwards against pirates.

During the 1820s Farragut escorted merchant ships through the Gulf of Mexico, possibly putting into the port of Mobile at one time. In 1825 Farragut was assigned to the ship which carried the Marquis de Lafayette back to France after his tour of the United States, which included Mobile.

Perhaps as a portent of the impending conflict, in 1833 Farragut ran the Natchez into the port of Charleston under orders to compel observance of U.S. revenue laws, which were threatened by South Carolina nullificationists.

Later, for two years Farragut was assigned land duty while he cared for his

Admiral David G. Farragut

This photograph of Admiral David G. Farragut was taken several years after the end of the Civil War. The admiral was 63-years-old when he participated in the Battle of Mobile Bay, an age when most men today are thinking about retirement. The admiral did not observe the battle from a safe distance but rather fought with his crew under the cannon of Fort Morgan and the Confederate fleet in the bay. (Photo courtesy of the Museum of the City of Mobile)

Farragut, who was opposed to armed resistance against the United States, was at Norfolk, Va. when the Civil War broke out.

Deciding to serve the Union, Farragut at first served on the naval retiring board in Brooklyn.

According to his Moss Point descendant, the navy was reluctant to give him a command position. Because he was a Southerner they were unsure of his loyalty.

However, James Farragut said, through the work of the Porter family the future admiral was given command of the navy.

In 1862 Farragut, at the age of 61, was appointed to the western-Gulf blockading squadron in command of the largest fleet that had ever sailed under the U.S. flag. He was assigned the task of capturing New Orleans and opening the Mississippi River, which he accomplished by 1863. For doing that Congress created for him the title of rear admiral.

James Farragut said that during the war, the admiral would often come ashore at Pascagoula to visit his sister.

Then, at an age when most men today are thinking of retirement, Farragut turned toward directing the capture of Mobile.

The Battle of Mobile Bay has been recounted many times but the moment of his famous command is worth briefly retelling. As the fleet was passing Fort Morgan the ironclad Tecumseh struck an underwater mine, or torpedo, and sank. The old admiral then lashed himself to the rigging of his ship, the Hartford, made his famous utterance to ignore the torpedoes, broke from his place in the line and hurried to put his vessel in the lead of the fleet.

This action inspired the whole fleet with confidence at a moment of confusion and indecision which might have lead to defeat.

For his action in capturing Mobile Congress created for Farragut the title of admiral. Shortly after this he was relieved of his command at his own request and in December 1864 was given a grand ovation in New York and $50,000 to buy a house there.

In 1868 Farragut took command of the European squadron for about a year until failing health compelled his retirement from active service. He

PASCAGOULA, JACKSON CO.

PEOPLE WILL TALK.

You may get through the world but 'twill be very slow.

If you listen to all that is said as you go ; You'll be worried, and fretted, and kept in a stew.

For meddlesome tongues will have something to do.

For people will talk.

If quiet and modest you'll have it presumed, That your humble position is only assumed.

You're a wolf in sheep's clothing, or else you're a sheep.

But don't let them keep putting you down.

For people will talk.

If generous and noble they'll vent out their spleen,

You'll hear some loud hints that you're selfish and mean.

If upright and honest, and fair as the day, They'll call you a rogue in a sly, sneaking way.

For people will talk.

And then if you show the least boldness of heart, Or a slight inclination to take your own part.

They will call you an upstart, conceited and vain.

But keep straight ahead don't stop to explain.

For people will talk.

If threadbare your dress, or old fashioned your hat,

Some one will surely take notice of that.

And hint rather strong that you can't pay your way.

But don't get excited whatever they say,

For people will talk.

If you dress in fashion, don't think to escape, Or they criticize then in a different shape.

You're ahead of your means, or your tailor's unpaid.

But mind your own business, there's naught to be made.

For people will talk.

Now the best way to do is to do as you please.

For your mind, if you have one, will then be at ease.

Of course you will meet with all sort of abuse, But don't think to stop them, it aint any use.

For people will talk.

PAPER NO. II.

Letter from Gov. Claiborne to the Secretary of

NEW ORLEANS, June 5, 1811.

SIR—The enclosed statements Nos. 1 and 2, as to the anarchy and disorder which prevail on the seaboard, between Bay St. Louis and Pascagoula, were received yesterday. Immediate action was necessary with the view to the extension of our laws in that quarter, and I have, accordingly promulgated an ordinance establishing two parishes in that district, and have dispatched Dr. Wm. Flood a trustworthy and eminent citizen, under special instruction, to ascertain the parties and assert the supremacy of our flag and our laws.

Commissioner Shaw will soon arrive in the dispatch with his report, and will be expected to examine the same. I have no doubt but that

FARRAGUT'S STATEMENT (No. 2.)

On the 2d December last I arrived in the bay of Pascagoula. On the 3d immediately on going ashore 10 armed men presented themselves and pre- wished to see me. I excused myself from going immediately, but promised that I would report to them next day. Accordingly, the 4th of Dec., I called on them at the house of John B. Nicolet deceased, and they immediately hoisted the flag of the convention. Next day they seized John B. Bodran's schooner. On the 6th, they seized the schooners of Anthony Krebs, and Augustine, a mulatto. They brought these vessels in front of Nicholet's house, and put aboard all the personal property, negroes, drygoods, liquors, household furniture etc., and even the locks and hinges of the doors. On the 10th after appointing one Peter Nicola, captain and commandant, the vessels departed under command of Capt. Dupree, and proceeded to his residence up the Pascagoula river, which is about two miles below the line of demarcation. The said Dupree left with commandant Nicola's orders to call on the people as far as Bay St. Louis to take the oath of allegiance to the Convention. On my way from Pascagoula to New Orleans, near the Pass, I fell in with Nicola, James Havens, and two others, strangers to me, ordering the people to repair to Pascagoula and take the oath. When I left Pascagoula, Dec. 13, the flag of the convention, was flying at the mouth of the river, and the general understanding was that all the settlements, from Bayou Batre to Bay St. Louis, were under the jurisdiction of said captain Peter Nicola, agent of the convention. There were no Spanish authorities on the coast.

GEORGE FARRAGUT.

Relatives of Admiral David Farragut who were present at the recent dedication of a marker at the admiral's boyhood home near Gautier include Miss Rence Jane, Robert Farragut, C. L. Davis and Miss Patsy Farragut. All are grand nephews and nieces of the famed admiral. The marker was placed at the home of Admiral Farragut's father, George Farragut, on the west side of the Pascagoula river by the Jackson County Historical Society, several of whose members are shown with the Farragut kinfolk.

Markers honor Graveline, Farragut

Editor's note: This is a continuation of a weekly series on our area's historic markers. Today's story features the 12th and 13th sites in the series.

By JOANNE ANDERSON
Correspondent

Historic markers honoring early founders George Farragut and Jean-Baptiste Baudreau dit Graveline are located in the two Interstate 10 rest stops located north and south of I-10 in Gautier.

The Farragut marker is accessible to eastbound travelers and the Graveline for those heading west.

They read:

"George Farragut — Near this site was the home of George Farragut (1755-1817), the father of Adm. David Farragut of Civil War fame. A veteran of the Revolutionary War and member of the Tennessee frontier militia, George Farragut served with the U.S. Navy along the Mississippi coast 1807-1811 and as the first justice of the peace in Pascagoula."

And "Graveline — In 1718, this area was settled by Jean-Baptiste Baudreau dit Graveline, born 1671 in Montreal. Arrived with d'Iberville at Fort Maurepas aboard the Renommée, Jan. 8, 1700. Prominent colonist — adventurer — merchant."

An adventurer who was said to have risked his life many times, Graveline participated in the expeditions in Canada against the Iroquois and later in an unsuccessful effort to take Hudson's Bay from the English.

In 1699, Graveline was one of 60 Canadians who sailed from Newfoundland to Rochefort, France, where they awaited the return of Pierre Le Moyne d'Iberville from America.

If Iberville's expedition was successful, the men would be ready for Iberville's second voyage to the new French colony of Louisiana.

It did succeed, and they embarked in October, 1699, reaching Fort Maurepas on Jan. 8, 1700.

Graveline remained at Fort Maurepas until the capital was moved in 1702 to a site on the Mobile River, where he then lived at Fort Louis for a time.

By 1718, he had settled on his vast acreage on the west side of the Pascagoula River. The exact location and size of his land holdings is unknown, but probably included most of the land between Ocean Springs and the Pascagoula River by grant from the French government in Mobile.

Graveline died about 1762, more than 90 years old, most likely in Gautier on his Pascagoula River Plantation.

"Most of the old families of Gautier are descendents of this man of intelligence, industry and character," said Gautier historian Jack Womack.

Farragut point

George Farragut, father of Adm. David Farragut, the first full admiral of the U.S. Navy, lived in Gautier on his plantation at Farragut Point from 1809 until his death in 1817. He was an important citizen of Gautier, recognized not only for his role in establishing U.S. sovereignty over the area, but also for his involvement in the Revolutionary War and the Tennessee Militia.

At the age of 10, he went to sea. In 1775, hearing of the difficulties between Great Britain and her colonies, he resolved to devote his life and fortune to the service of the Americans.

He had a distinguished career in the American Revolutionary War, becoming a captain of cavalry for North Carolina. After the Revolution, Farragut earned a livelihood as a mariner until 1792, when he was appointed a Major of Militia.

In 1793, he served in an expedition against the Cherokees. In 1807, President Thomas Jefferson made him a Sailing Master in the navy, in which he remained until discharged March 25, 1814.

Farragut died on his plantation at Point Paquet (now called Farragut Point) in Gautier at the age of 61. Many of his descendents live in Jackson County. He was buried at the Point, but the location of his grave is unknown. One account says that he was buried near his sawmill, location also unknown. The eastbound rest stop, site of his marker, is located on his old homestead.

Graveline's stories are contained in the new 200-page fifth edition of "Gautier, Mississippi - A Short History" now on sale by the Friends of Gautier Public Library for $20.

Farragut's Boyhood on Gulf Coast Where Father Owned Grande Ecore Is Remembered

Pascagoula, Miss., March 2.—When Carroll Manstield portrayed in a recent issue of The Times-Picayune the naval battle on Mobile bay during the Civil war between the flotilla of Union warships commanded by Admiral David G. Farragut and Confederate sea and land forces, older residents recalled that the hand of fate played a part to prevent the famous admiral from claiming Pascagoula as his birthplace. They also revived some bits of almost forgotten local history in connection with the boyhood of the admiral, and of the beautiful estate three miles north of Pascagoula river, which was the future admiral's ancestral home.

Grande Ecore, the place is called, the seat, that is still intact comprises 235 acres but it might have been larger than this if the original grant of the King of Spain to David Glascoe Farragut was consulted. David Glascoe Farragut was the father of Admiral Farragut. He was born at Mexico; emigrated to the United States, fought in the Revolutionary war, and coming to the Spanish possessions in the South received a grant of land from the king of Spain. This he called Grande Ecore.

Here the elder Farragut resided, and at one time served as a magistrate in this section of the Mississippi territory. Many years ago the property passed into the hands of Northern purchasers, and until December of 1925 the title was vested in Mrs. Sarah Glenn, who resides in the North. It was acquired in that year by J. N. Flowers, a former attorney-general of Mississippi, and J. L.

Smith, both of Jackson, making but three owners since 1776.

In 1801 David Glascoe Farragut and his wife were either visiting or temporarily residing at Knoxville, Tenn., and it was in that city that the future great admiral was born. They returned to Jackson county and the boy lived on the ancestral farm. His father died when he was seven years old and the boy was adopted by Captain Admiral Porter, a friend of the family who had frequently visited Grande Ecore and had become attached to the boy. At a tender age young Farragut saw service in the War of 1812, and eventually became a sailor, winning promotions until he attained the rank of admiral. His exploits in the Civil war are history but not so much has been written of his boyhood life spent on the banks of the Pascagoula river in sight of the great bay, which must have fired his hopes and aroused his ambitions to some day sail the sea on his own account.

The Farragut place has been known also as the Glenn place, and a large lake near the bluffs which overlook the river is known as Glenn's lake. In recent years small sawmills have operated in that locality storing logs in the lake and barging the lumber down the river, but history left no distinguishing marks, and fields and banks that had known the tread of a future great admiral were but another of the many beautiful places on Pascagoula river.

There are a number of Admiral Farragut's relatives still living in Pascagoula. The admiral died in 1870.

Low Tides at Pascagoula Reveal Skeleton of Confederate Vessel Beached by Crew During Battle

(Special to The Times-Picayune)
Pascagoula, Miss., Feb. 6.—All extreme low tide on Pascagoula Beach, not unusual during the winter months, brings to view the wreck of a Confederate gunboat in the sands about 2000 feet from the shore. Very little is left; just the boilers and a few pieces of barnacle-covered iron, which might possibly have been parts of the engine equipment.

Old residents say that the ill-fated craft was beached by her own crew rather than permit her to fall into the hands of a pursuing Federal fleet. The crew abandoned the gunboat in shallow water after setting her afire and waded to the shore. During the years since the close of the war the wooden structure of the boat rotted off and drifted ashore. The boilers and iron work remains, settling deeper and deeper in the sands, and in a few years even this will be gone.

In an effort to obtain an account of the engagement which caused this loss to the Confederate navy and also to obtain information of a skirmish fought between land forces of the opposing armies on Pascagoula soil, old residents and local historians were asked to supply the details, but there are none now living who could give much enlightenment.

Outside of the fact that the boat was grounded to prevent capture by the Federals, there is nothing to be added. John H. Hill, Jr., a resident of Moss Point, related an incident of a school teacher, holding classes in a building near the beach, ordering her pupils to lie flat on the floor as shells from the Federal warships fell near the building.

Search among records in Jackson fails to reveal anything concerning the sinking of the Confederate ship of war, but a communication from a colonel of the Federal forces to his superior officer gives details of a skirmish at Pascagoula on April 9, 1863. Reference is made in a number of dispatches between the commander of the Confederate defenses at New Orleans and President Jefferson Davis on means of fortifying Ship Island, but nothing definite is revealed other than that it appears the Confederates once held the island, but either lost possession or abandoned it, as the Federal regiment that was engaged at Pascagoula was sent from the station at Ship Island.

The account of the skirmish at Pascagoula is contained in the report of Colonel N. W. Daniels, Second Regiment, Louisiana Native Guards, dispatched from his headquarters at Ship Island on April 10, 1863, to Brigadier-General W. T. Sherman, commanding defenses at New Orleans, La. The Second Regiment was composed of seven companies attached to the Corps d'Afrique, a negro organization stationed at New Orleans and officered by white men.

Colonel Daniels' report follows:

"Sir: I have the honor to report that I embarked with a detachment of 130 men of my regiment on the United States transport General Banks, and yesterday at 9 a. m. made an attack on Pascagoula, Miss. Landed my force, took possession of the place, and hoisted the American colors on the hotel. I immediately thereafter was attacked by the Confederate cavalry, some 300 strong, and a company of infantry. Repulsed them after a severe fight, killing twenty or more, and wounding a large number, capturing three prisoners and the Confederate colors. Held the town until 2 p. m., frequent skirmishes occurring meanwhile, when I withdrew my forces to the boat, learning that large reinforcements had arrived from the camp up the Pascagoula river. Loss in battle, two killed and five slightly wounded. In covering return of troops to the transport, the United States gunboat at Jackson, which accompanied the expedition under orders not to take part in the attack, supposing we were repulsed, unfortunately threw a shell directly into the column moving out the wharf, killing four men and seriously wounding five of my force. The expedition otherwise was a perfect success, as the enemy in every attack were repulsed; a large number killed and wounded; prisoners and their Confederate colors captured with the slight loss of two men. The expedition has also materially changed the plans of the Mobile forces, as they were about sending the weight of their numbers to Charleston, S. C., this attack causing them to send heavy reinforcements towards Pascagoula. I forward the dispatch in great haste by transport General Banks, which leaves immediately, and will send details by next opportunity.

"Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

"N. W. DANIELS.

"Colonel, Second Louisiana Native Guards, A. D., Commanding Post."

Q. When was Thanksgiving first observed? C. C.

A. Thanksgiving Day was first celebrated in Plymouth on December 18, 1621, and next on July 30, 1623. The first Boston Thanksgiving was held on February 22, 1630. The first printed notice was for June 29, 1676, for the state of Massachusetts. Washington appointed the last Thursday in November 1790. James Madison selected the second Thursday in April 1815. Lincoln began the custom of the annual observance on the last Thursday in November in 1863. The last Thursday in November has not been fixed by law as Thanksgiving Day, but each president issues a proclamation regarding this holiday.

Q. Is Thanksgiving Day observed in England? E. R.

A. Thanksgiving Day is not observed in England by the English. It is purely an American festival. The Harvest Home is celebrated in England on September 21.
